With proper clothing, good play space, good company and equipment, children can to great advantage play outdoors many hours each day in winter as in summer. Outdoor play promotes not only muscular development, control, good posture and physical health, but also many of the qualities of character that we want most for our children Climbing, swinging, riding bikes and skating develop precision and controls that make for sound nerves and strong bodies. If your neighborhood does not have a well equipped playground, join other parent in securing one for your child and all children.

Radio

THE FIGHT FOR FM

If FM broadcasting is to become a reality, it will be "only because organized labor and a helluva lot of other people" put up a fight for it, says Eugene Konecky in a release issued by the Committee for Democracy in Radio.

Both the Radio Manufacturers Assn., representing 90 per cent of the industry, and the FCC are busy fighting it, says Konecky who exposed the grab of FM by vested interests of AM radio, in a pamphlet "Monopoly Steals FM From the People" previously reviewed in The CIO News.

Citing some new facts made public since the Committee published this pamphlet, he says that Census Bureau reports show that in May 1946, production of radio sets was 10 per cent above the period of May 1941—but no FM sets were produced in May 1946. In July and August 1946, 3,000,000 radio sets were produced, only 65,000 or two and one-sixteenth per cent of them FM sets.

Present FCC policy, says Konecky, tends to "transfer the standard (AM) broadcasting system intact to the FM system, thereby perpetuating the existing radio monopoly."

In view of the reaction rampant in the broadcasting world, he urges the great need "for labor and all other progressives to swing into action on the basis of the people's program outlined in the Committee's pamphlet, and warns that the growth of newspaper control over radio broadcasting should be a matter of alarm to labor and the general public.

New Radio Programs

A series of three new radio educational programs worth watching for on local stations are scheduled to start soon. The first, "Uncle Sam Speaks" will be informal round table discussions of government policy featuring policy-making officials and leading members of Congress. The opening program, to be heard on o after Oct. 14, features Natl. Housing Administrator Wilson Wyatt discussing the housing crisis with a World War II veteran.

A second series, called "Issue of the Week" will start on or about Oct. 16, and the third, "Science and You," a program on current scientific developments, starts on or about Oct. 18.

CIO members interested are urged to watch for these new programs, and if they are not carried to call or write their local stations asking about them.

READING NOTES

Following the example of a number of other weeklies which have previously run features on Walter Reuther, the Oct. 11 issue of Colliers has come across with another snappy story about the "red-headed" president of the CIO Auto Workers. It's called "Rampageous Reuther" and is written by Lester Velie.

"The automobile industry, justly renowned for its new models, has come up with a new-model labor leader," Velie starts off. "With Reuther in the driver's seat," he continues, "the UAW is a powerful vehicle for freewheeling social and economic ideas."

The general reader who knows little or nothing about unions will probably get a spotty picture of the UAW and its president from the way the article quite understandably plays up the more dramatic incidents and personal conflicts, but it has the new-style non-hostile tone prevalent in recent years and does have buried in it quite a bit of factual material about the UAW's program and achievements.

EDUCATION

UAW's New Project

Something new and interesting in labor education is being tried by the CIO Auto Workers. The union's education department, which initiated it, calls it the "Wrapped-Up Education Program." It comes in a big package sent out once a month by express. The first month's kit contains: A ten-panel easel chart talk called a "turn-over talk"; stand-up placards about the union for bars, store counters and shop windows; posters for shop and union walls; 100 copies of a leaflet done in color; for distribution at classes, a mimeographed Discussion Guide, and other material.

"A complete union education and organizing kit that is as near self-starting as any union material yet," is what Victor Reuther, UAW education director, calls it.

Subject of the first month's kit. "You are the Union," is a basic introduction to the UAW-CIO. The next month's subject is "The Big Nickle", and is all about the dues dollar. For succeeding months, the department plans kits on Time Study, Cooperatives, Guaranteed Annual Wage, Pensions, Housing, etc.

Offered to UAW locals upon request, the service costs $10 a month.

Midwest Conference

The seventh annual Midwest Workers' Education Conference will be held Nov. 2-3 at the Pfister Hotel, Milwaukee, Wis., announces the American Labor Education Service. Topic for this year's discussion is "How Can Workers' Education Advance Labor's Economic and Political Objectives?"

The conference will open with a panel Nov. 2 on "Unions Facing Reconversion Developments and the 1946 Elections." Preceding the conference, a special institue for those professionally engaged in labor education will be held the afternoon and evening of Nov. 1 and the morning of Nov. 2.

French Teachers in U. S.

Six French teachers who are on an official mission for the French government to study technical, vocational, education and trade apprenticeship were entertained last Sunday by the CIO Teachers' Union of N. Y. City.

Featured speakers were W. T. Giles, English delegate to the Natl. Education Conference at Endicott, and Saul Mills Greater N. Y. CIO Council.

Mrs. Rose Russell, TU legislative representative, reported on her recent trip to Paris as delegate of the CIO United Public Workers to the first international Congress of teachers since the war.

School Essay Contest

An essay contest for senior high school students on two subjects—"The Contribution of Trade Unions to Democracy" and "The Danger of Racial and Religious Prejudice to Democracy"—have been announced by the Natl. Religion & Labor Foundation for the school year 1946-47.

"Two of the first moves Hitler made when he came to power in 1933 were to organize a campaign of mass hatred against the Jewish minority and to destroy the German trade unions," states the Foundation in announcing the contest.

"Against this historical background the twin question of how our own racial minorities are treated and what is happening to trade unions provide an acid test of the strength and vitality of our own American democracy."

Prizes offered for each subject are first prize $100, second $50, third $25. Five runner-up prizes of $10 each are also offered for each subject. Essays submitted must be the original work of the student and will be limited to 500 words. Entries must be postmaked not later than Mar. 31, 1947.

Highlander Course Ends

How to get a bigger attendance by making union meetings more interesting was the central theme of the two-week union leadership fall term at Highlander Folk School which closed the end of September.

The school was attended by CIO members from North Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Arkansas and Texas, representing unions in the textile, food and tobacco, rubber and Mississippi River shipping industries.

Students were taught how to make use of movies, simple skits, forums, debates, group singing and labor quiz programs to enliven union meetings. Daily classes included courses in steward training, political action, labor legislation, labor history and economics.

PAC Battle Songs

An effective weapon in the fight for a progressive Congress is the new CIO-PAC record album containing ten songs in popular, folk music style and delivering a political action punch that really carries a wallop.

The records are intended for use at plant gate rallies, union meetings, political affairs and in the home, where they will tune up the battle to win effective price control, decent housing, anti-poll tax and anti-lynch laws, national health insurance and adequate minimum wages.

The attractively bound album of songs may be obtained from the CIO-PAC, 205 East 42 St., N. Y. 17, N. Y., for $4 a set.

the ADVENTURES of JIM BARRY

by MORT MESKIN and JOE GREENE

BRAD LINTON — KIT'S FATHER — CALLS A MEETING OF A SMALL GROUP OF WORKERS FROM THE MILLS TO HEAR JIM TALK ABOUT ORGANIZING A UNION...

WE AIN'T GOING TO LET ANYBODY SPLIT US UP... WE'RE IN THIS TOGETHER.

STICKING TOGETHER IS NOT ALWAYS EASY... YOUR BOSS DOESN'T WANT YOU TO FORM A UNION AND HE'S GOING TO USE EVERY METHOD TO DESTROY YOUR UNITY.

HE'S GOING TO USE STOOL-PIGEONS TO WORK UP THE MEN ABOUT NEGROES AND CATHOLICS... OR JEWS... ANYTHING TO GET THE UNION MEN FIGHTING OR QUARRELLING AMONG THEMSELVES...

OR IF CARRUTHERS FINDS OUT THAT I'M HELPIN YOU ORGANIZE HE'LL CALL ME A FOREIGNER.. OR AN OUTSIDER... OR EVEN A COMMUNIST STIRRING UP TROUBLE... ANYTHING TO SPLIT UP THE UNION MEN!

THAT'S NOT GOING TO WORK HERE IN WARRENTOWN! WE KNOW WHY YOU'RE HERE, JIM — CAUSE WE ASKED YOU TO HELP US BUILD A UNION SO'S WE CAN GET BETTER PAY AND BETTER WORKING CONDITIONS!

RECKON YORE A THOUSAND PERCENT RIGHT, BRAD.

CARRUTHERS MAY BE A-CALLING YOU TROUBLE-MAKER, JIM... AND I RECKON HE'S RIGHT IF HE DOES! PAYING DECENT WAGES IS PLENTY OF TROUBLE TO BIG-SHOTS LIKE A MILL OWNER — BUT MIGHTY NICE FOR US AND OUR FAMILIES!

IF WE DON'T LET CARRUTHERS STOOGES BUST US UP — NOTHING CAN STOP US. NOW LET'S MAKE OUR PLANS...

YEH... WE'RE A'RARING TO GET GOING!

WE'VE GOT SIX MEN FROM THE MILLS HERE... EACH ONE OF US HAS TO START TALKING TO 3 OR 4 FRIENDS... GUYS WE KNOW ARE IN FAVOR OF THE UNION...

I KNOW A MITE MORE'N FOUR WHO WANT A UNION.. BUT WHAT DO WE TELL THEM?

TELL THEM WHAT A UNION'S FOR... THAT IT CAN GET YOU BETTER PAY... SECURITY ON THE JOB... BETTER WORKING CONDITIONS... SHORTER HOURS... AND TO GET THESE CONDITIONS EVERYBODY HAS TO STICK TOGETHER THEN WE'LL GET ALL THESE MEN TO A MEETING —

RECKON WE CAN USE MY BARN FOR THAT MEETING — IT KIN HOLD MAYBE A HUNDRED MEN..

Murray To Trainmen

LET US MARCH ON TOGETHER

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE CIO and the unaffiliated Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen "are intimately linked in ideals and structure and in policy," CIO Pres. Philip Murray told several hundred delegates to the BRT convention at Miami Beach, Florida.

"We look to the same future," Murray told the railwaymen. "Let us march toward it together."

Murray, who was accompanied by CIO Organization Director Allan S. Haywood on his trip to Miami, noted that "the growth of American railroad labor has been marked by struggle, by sacrifice, by militancy, by discipline."

Throughout his speech, Murray praised the trainmen's brotherhood for militant defense of its members' rights and living standards, and he chided the Federal Government for its behavior at the time of the railway strike early this year.

"The Federal Government created a crisis which could readily have been avoided and then upon the basis of this contrived crisis, forced a settlement of the strike," the CIO leader said.

PRES. A. F. WHITNEY of the BRT has conducted a splendid campaign in behalf of BRT members, Murray pointed out, and he painted a picture of sharp contrast between the conduct of Whitney and certain leaders of the AFL.

"There is the summer soldier labor leader who blusters and swaggers when there are no challenges or pressures but who runs for cover when the moment of struggle arrives," he charged.

"There is the 'wait for baby' labor leader who ties himself to another man's kite and another man's cause, who lacks the courage and the initiative independently to find the solution for the trade union problems of his membership.

"There is the 'me, too' labor leader who in the heat of struggle is nowhere to be found, but who promptly appears when victory is to be claimed, with the parasitic cry, 'me, too; me, too'."

AFL attacks on the trainmen, Murray said, have been paralleled by similar efforts to disturb CIO relations with employers. AFL leaders, he charged, "are great believers in organizing in the employer's office, and in a little while that same organizer or another one of the same ilk appears at another employer's door with the same smelly deal.

"This organization (the AFL) has become so accustomed to permitting itself to be used for the purpose of frustrating the legitimate trade union aspirations of workers that it has become a national scandal," Murray declared.

IN HIS discussion of the trainmen's efforts to win improved wages and conditions last spring, Murray flayed the Railway Labor Act as "an instrument for holding down the wage standards of railroad workers."

"Is it a wonder that those who seek to cripple the labor movement seek to impose the hampering restrictions of the Railway Labor Act upon all of American labor?" the CIO leader asked.

"Is it a wonder that the Railway Labor Act has become the pinup statute of the American labor haters?

"But you and I know that this love affair between American employers and the Railway Labor Act is not a passing romantic fancy. The anti-union employers of this country are very pleased with the act because it is a means of maintaining and increasing profits."

IN DESCRIBING the close relations between the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and CIO, Murray talked of the similarity in structure of the two organizations, of their similar viewpoints, and their common experiences:

"Like every CIO affiliate you are an industrial union," he said. "You have long since recognized that jurisdictional craft refinements are an employer's paradise, that organization upon an industrial principle is imperative."

CIO TIMBER PLAN WOULD HELP HOUSING PROGRAM

THE CIO this week called for a far-reaching federal program of regulation and assistance in the nation's timber industry, with the goal of achieving sufficient lumber products to meet the needs of the national housing program and to insure stabilized, non-wasteful high production during the next few years.

The program was presented to the meeting of the American Forest Congress, at Washington, D. C., by Anthony Wayne Smith, CIO staff advisor on forestry affairs, and Ellery Foster of Portland, Oreg., director of research for the CIO Woodworkers Union.

CIO called for a three-point program designed to stimulate timber production while at the same time conserving the nation's forest reserves:

1 "Federal regulation of commercial cutting operations now on all private timber-lands over which the federal government may claim constitutional jurisdiction."

2 Extension of the principal features of the Agricultural Conservation Program to the lumber industry, with provisions for conservation payments in the form of cash, materials, equipment, supplies and services; extension of forestry marketing and utilization services; credit arrangements to stimulate development of forestry cooperatives; assistance from the federal public works program to include construction of primary logging roads on private lands; and the application of new and effective safety methods.

3 Retention of existing government-owned forest lands, with expansion of federal or state-owned forest properties in special areas and marginal land; and sharp opposition to any trend to returning federal timber lands to private ownership and operation.

The statement pointed out that the Forestry Conservation & Development Act introduced in the House last April by Rep. Frank Hook (D. Mich.) as H. R. 6221 has received CIO endorsement as the "measure which comes closest to fulfilling the program of the CIO and as an excellent statement of sound policy and method in forestry matters for the United States of America."

"The serious lumber shortage which has helped to hold back the national home-building program is of deep concern to every American citizen," the CIO statement declared. "Moreover, many of the industries in which CIO members are employed are heavily dependent upon adequate supplies of wood for continuous full production."

"The key to the solutioin of our timber shortages and the achievement of a stable flow of forest products for American consumers lies in the re-establishment of the productivity of our privately owned timberlands," the CIO said.

At the same time CIO warned against turning over lands now held by the federal or state government to private ownership.

"To entertain for one moment at this time in the history of the country the possibility of returning federal timber lands to private ownership and operation, or even to state ownership and operation, while destructive cutting is still the norm in the American timber industry, would be the height of folly, and would represent a betrayal of public trust on the part of the legislative and executive branches of the national government," CIO said.

Call To CIO Parley

FOR UNITY TO MAKE ENDURING PEACE

A warning that "there is a terrifying drift toward war," and a demand for "the strengthening of unity among the United Nations to assure an enduring peace," were sounded in this week's call to the eighth annual CIO Convention.

CIO President Murray and Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey, who issued the call, also announced a meeting of the CIO Executive Board at the Chelsea, starting Nov. 13.

In issuing the call, Murray and Carey said in part:

"The CIO today is recognized as the leading spokesman for the workers of America in the economic field. Organizing the unorganized and bargaining collectively for decent wages, hours and working conditions, have been and will remain our major objectives.

"We have also functioned in the political field, the consumer field, and the international field, all of which are so closely tied up with the economic welfare of all our citizens.

"The world has just emerged from an agonizing conflict in which the united strength of the common people defeated the forces of Nazism and Japanese militarism. But momentous tasks are still before us.

"Remnants of evil forces are still at work sowing the seeds of disunity and prejudice. We must recognize that at present there is a terrifying drift toward war.

"Enemies of organized labor have amassed tremendous resources and are embarked on a campaign to undermine trade unions and thereby defeat the efforts of the working people to improve their standards of living.

The aspirations of our members and other peaceloving and democratic forces are simple but far-reaching. They are embodied in the principles so eloquently espoused by our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"We seek freedom from fear, freedom from want, freedom of religion, and freedom of speech, assembly and free association. We demand the realization of President Roosevelt's Economic Bill of Rights.

"We demand the strengthening of unity among the United Nations to assure an enduring peace and abolish war—so abhorred by all humanity."

A REPUBLICAN 'GIFT' ★ ★ ★ MEAT FOR THE RICH

By FRED d'AVILA

THE POLITICAL organization that inflicted Herbert Hoover and the 1929 depression on the American people, this week became the Party of Red Meat Plus High Prices.

Those who could afford dollar a pound round steak cheered the action forced on President Truman, who removed meat from price control under pressure of a Republican-inspired, unworkable price law and a meat shortage created by big packers hungry for profits. Reactionary Democrats, in opposition to the Admistration, cooperated with the Republicans.

Millions of workers, however, became the victims of rationing in reverse. With food prices up nearly 50% since V-J Day, wage and salary earners found little to cheer about. Where meat was available, prices were outrageous. Sample retail checks in N. Y. City and Washington, D. C. showed the following comparisons between former ceiling prices under OPA and the new levels set by the GOP and the Packers:

	SEPT. OPA CEILING	GOP PRICES
Hamburger	30c lb.	55c
Pork	43c lb.	89c to $1
Rib lamb chops	64c lb.	79c
Ham	42c lb.	68c
Frankfurters	50c lb.	65c
Bacon	43c lb.	70c
Chuck Roast	47c lb.	78c

IN A REPORT on the situation, the CIO Political Action Committee charged that the Republicans, guided by Senators Taft and Wherry, had led the fight to wreck price control and had encouraged packers to hold back supplies in the hope of creating a crisis.

"It is clear," said the PAC report, "that the packers, in a well organized attempt to place their Republican spokesmen in the 80th Congress, have engineered the greatest conspiracy ever perpetrated against the American people.

"At their instance and that of the Republican Party, we are well on the way to economic disaster. Nothing but a tremendous outpouring of votes against this coalition in November can stem the tide."

SAMPLE of what's to come—with only 15% of the average family's food budget subject to price control—was a Dun & Bradstreet report showing the organization's wholesale food index hit an all-time record of $6.15. The previous record was $5.42 last Aug. 27. Under OPA controls, the index stayed below $4.50.

Removed from controls this week were: margarine, shortening, mayonnaise, salad dressing, cooking and salad oils, coffee, soybean oil and byproduct animal feeds and mixed feeds. The Price Decontrol Board refused to reimpose ceilings on milk, butter, cheese and other dairy products despite the fact that it agreed their prices have risen to "an unreasonable level."

As meat controls went overboard, wholesale prices jumped in some cases over 200% and the run of cattle from the 12 major livestock centers in the West

Hits Packers' Holdup

GOP USING THREATS, KROLL CHARGES

JACK Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director, said this week that he believes the American people "will not be intimidated into voting for reaction and its candidates in November" by the recent big-business - Republican strike "against our dinner tables."

Broadcasting over a coast-to-coast hookup, Kroll said Republicans are attempting to win this year's elections with threats.

"It is certain that the brass hats of the Republican Party cannot hope to win friends or influence voters on the basis of their record in the 79th Congress," he asserted.

This "threat" strategy was used as early as 1833, he pointed out, when Nicholas Biddle precipitated a financial panic in an attempt to force Andrew Jackson to surrender economic control of the nation into the hands of a small group of profiteers. A similar group today, he said, is using its economic power to panic the nation into turning over its political reins to them.

THE removal of meat from the dinner tables by the Big Business combine, Kroll said, constituted another case in point, prompted by the packers' desire "to pyramid their already fabulous profits at the expense of the American consumer" and their desire to "direct the resentment of the voters against the national administration, and so to win a victory for reaction in November."

"Big business has won its first objective," he said. "The American people must not permit them to gain their second objective. We will not turn over our government to the greedy men who have defied the people's will and nullified our nation's laws."

"They deliberately create artificial shortages of vital goods and they cry 'bureaucracy,'" he said, "as their pretext for laying off thousands of workers and depriving millions of consumers of the commodities they need. They make a shambles of price controls and then shout 'regimentation' when the people are squeezed by mounting living costs."

RECALLING conditions under Republican administrations from 1920 to 1933, Kroll pointed out that Hoover had engineered the nation from inflation into a boom and bust period.

"There was free and unadulterated freedom under their kind of government—freedom to look for a job, freedom to live in a Hooverville, freedom from hope, freedom to starve."

The PAC, its director said, believes that a secure and plentiful America in a peaceful world can be obtained by a citizenry that maintains an interest "in the affairs of government and the officials who represent them. It believes that as an obligation of citizenship the individual must register and vote in both primary and general elections, thus actively participating in shaping the policies of our nation."

Discussing the PAC program, he said it is neither selfish nor narrow, but seeks the assurance that all Americans have decent jobs at good wages, that the resources of the country be used to benefit all the people instead of serving the interests of a few. In addition, the PAC "believes that America must and will cooperate with other nations in securing lasting peace."

GET OUT VOTERS TO WIN NOV. 5!

CHEERED by the heavy nation-wide registration, the CIO Political Action Committee Executive Board called this week for a mass outpouring of votes to defeat the "meat packers and the Republican Party who have forced the people to buy at their prices," and riveted attention on all CIO units to organize election day machinery.

PAC Director Jack Kroll stated that the first goal—a large registration—had been achieved, but that the final and biggest task, the "translating of those registered into voters" still remains.

He called upon all international unions, councils and PAC organizations to concentrate now on the "real guts" of political action, canvassing and doorbell ringing.

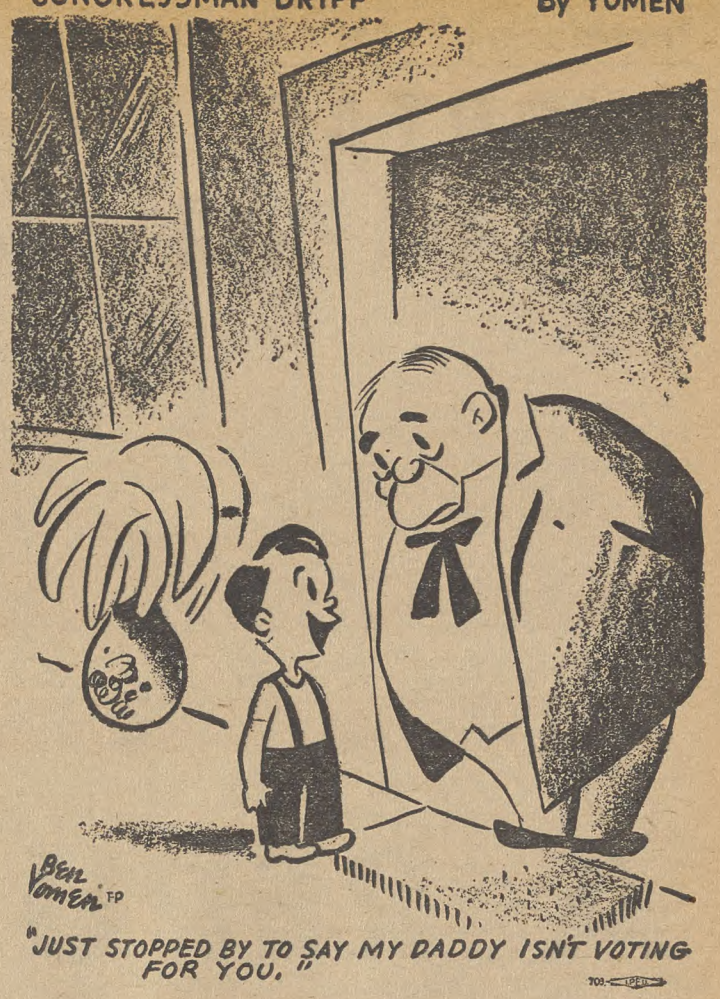
"Organization is the key to victory," Kroll said. We must use thousands of canvassers in each community to tell the people the facts on this most critical election. We must show how the reactionary coalition, spearheaded by the Republican Party's Senators Taft and Wherry, have sent prices soaring.

"We must warn them that unless such people and their beliefs are defeated at the polls, we will be taken on another Republican 'boom and bust' ride, which leads straight to depression. Ring doorbells and tell them the facts. That's our job now."

Kroll urged that preparations now be made for setting up car pools to get voters to the polls on November 5th and for arranging such details as poll watchers and telephone "vote reminder" squads.

The Executive Board heard reports from Thomas F. Burns and Tilford E. Dudley, Assistant Directors, on the middle west and far west political scenes and both were optimistic on the election outcome if the canvassing and vote-getting job is thoroughly done.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN



NO 'PURGE LIST' FOR PAC—KROLL

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

USING every form of negative in his vocabulary, CIO-PAC director Jack Kroll last week sought to impress upon a Congressional investigating committee that:

1. PAC does not have a national "purge list."

2. National PAC headquarters makes no endorsements, leaving all such action up to district and state organizations.

Kroll, who demonstrated patience approaching that of Job during his 2½-hour appearance before the committee, emphasized again and again that PAC is truly a people's "grass roots" movement. The function of national PAC headquarters, he pointed out, is merely to supply educational material and assistance to local groups engaged in political work.

Whether he convinced the committee, headed by Rep. Percy Priest (D., Tenn.) was a matter of doubt. At the end of three days of hearings—during which spokesmen appeared for CIO-PAC, Natl. Citizens PAC, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, AFL, Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and a new reactionary outfit known as Action, Inc.—Rep. Priest said he would call for sharp new limitations on political organizations.

While Kroll was questioned sharply about every phase of CIO political activity, the NAM was able to read into the record the amazing assertion that it engages in no political activity. NAM members are involved in both parties, the spokesman said, and partisanship by the big business organization might prove embarassing to its members!

THE CIO-PAC official emphasized continually that labor's political activity is directed exclusively towards helping secure more progressive, alert government throughout the country.

"It is the conviction of a lot of us in the labor movement that if Woodrow Wilson had had the support in 1920 of a group such as PAC, World War II and the depression of 1929 might have been averted," he said.

Tracing the growth of the PAC organization, Kroll noted that "before 1942 things looked pretty dark for the re-election of Franklin D. Roosevelt—and that had as much to do with formation of PAC as any other factor."

PAC itself does not make policy, Kroll emphasized, declaring: "We follow policies as laid down by the CIO on issues."

Heavy registration of voters, reported from many sections of the nation, was cited by the PAC leader as a hopeful sign in the coming Congressional elections.

"The people know who their friends are," he said. "When we send them a record, they make their own decisions." During the testimony, committee members and their counsel thumbed through the special voting record supplement of The CIO NEWS and a record produced by the New Republic early in 1946, and sought to gain an admission from Kroll that these constituted endorsement of candidates.

He maintained, however, that these documents were merely part of an education campaign along with other pamphlets, leaflets, books, etc., designed to provide voters with facts necessary for intelligent voting.

Inventories Total $37 Billion

SHORTAGES NO FAULT OF LABOR—MURRAY

PROTESTING against the treatment that labor receives at the hands of an unfriendly press, CIO Pres. Philip Murray declared this week that strikes and slowdowns were in no way responsible for present shortages of goods.

Murray was addressing 350 women at the "Political Workshop" sponsored by the Women's Division of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee at N. Y. City.

In the steel industry the present per capita production of steel workers is the highest in the nation's history, he said. The war record—460,000 steel workers produced 89,000,000 tons of steel in an average work week of 46.6 hours—was compared with the present when 462,000 workers are producing 84,000,000 tons in a work-week of 36.5 hours.

"And yet you pick up your papers and find that there are no cars, no refrigerators and the other things you women want, and this scarcity is attributed to a lack of interest on the part of labor," he said.

MURRAY charged that huge inventories of both durable and consumers goods constituted a much more real threat to the security and welfare of the nation than strikes.

According to the Dept. of Commerce, inventories of both durable and consumers goods are at the unprecedented high of $37,000,000,000.

If he were asked where those inventories were, Murray said, he couldn't answer. "There isn't anybody in Washington who can answer it. The Dept. of Commerce doesn't know. I've tried for the last few weeks to find out," he added.

QUESTIONED by the women about jursidictional strikes, Murray said that the CIO did not have them. "Ask Willie Green that one," he said.

A woman who described herself as a friend of labor who did not always have the facts she needed in an argument then asked Murray's opinion of strikes which took place in violation of contractual agreements.

His answer referred to the telegram sent him last week by Henry Ford II protesting UAW Local 600's "unauthorized" strike at Ford's Rouge plant.

When Murray investigated the situation he discovered that the company had been using a new process involving a chemical which endangered the health of the workers.

When four men had to be sent to the hospital, the union called a work stoppage. The right to refuse to risk health must be considered apart from the legal question of breach of contract, Murray stated.

Murray declared that the CIOs strike record was a good one: "The CIO doesn't like strikes" and only goes on one when "there is no other recourse." He described the five major CIO strikes early this year as necessary "to enforce the decisions of government fact-finding boards."

"They didn't strike," he said, "the operators struck against their government."

The women applauded Murray's description of labor's role in politics as a permanent and necessary one. The CIO fought for its members and for the nation as a whole, he stated. Its policy was to lick its enemies and help its friends win.

The CIO has learned, he continued, that it is to its advantage to work with other liberal and progressive organizations to further their common goals.

'Stop Making Atom Bombs'

The U. S. should stop making atom bombs. That was the flat statement made this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and other liberal leaders who discussed in N. Y. City a continuation program for the Conference of Progressives that met recently in Chicago.

The group noted that Bernard M. Baruch, who has presented a widely publicized plan for atomic power control, has not made "any further statement or clarification regarding this measure."

"So long as the U. S. continues to manufacture atomic bombs," the liberal group warned, "so long will our allies have cause for suspicion and distrust. Only when we announce the cessation of such manufacture, will all nations be able and willing to meet and negotiate as equals."

Pointing out that the Chicago Conference also had called for this policy, the group said that "it is our firm conviction today, as it was in Chicago, that such a demonstration of good will and good faith is absolutely essential if we are to bargain on equal grounds with the other United Nations concerning the control of atomic energy."

"You see, Friend? I Told You Your Watch Was No Good."

Murray's Prediction

SEES MOST POWERFUL LIBERAL MOVEMENT

WHAT is destined to become, according to CIO President Philip Murray, "the most powerful liberal and progressive movement ever brought together in the history of our country" began to solidify this week with the meeting in N. Y. City of 17 outstanding New Deal leaders, representing eight national progressive organizations.

Outgrowth of the recent Chicago Conference of Progressives, this meeting of the Coordinating Committee—at which former Price Administrator Chester Bowles and Florida Sen. Claude Pepper appeared as visitors—was held to further the unification of Roosevelt followers throughout the country and to consider the inclusion of interested groups not now represented.

The Committee agreed to meet in Washington on November 8 and to hold a major conference in Washington sometime in mid-January.

A nominating committee to consider the affiliation of new groups was established headed by Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Also appointed to the small committee, which will work to expand the scope of the organization by considering inclusion of additional liberal groups, were: C. B. Baldwin, executive vice chairman, Natl. Citizens PAC; Walter White, executive secretary, Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People; A. F. Whitney, president, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Jo Davidson, chairman, Independent Citizens Committee of Arts, Sciences & Professions; Jim Patton, president, Natl. Farmers Union; and Clark Foreman, president, Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

Murray said that the group hopes "in the course of 1947 to have brought together all the liberal-progressive elements into the Coordinating Committee."

"We hope that many of the International unions affiliated with the AFL will embrace the opportunity to affiliate with this movement. We have reason to believe many of them will," he added.

Also in the blueprint stage, Murray said, are city, county and state committees, similar to the overall committee, "so that the actual work of the Coordinating Committee will get down to the grass roots."

Plans for the "most powerful liberal agency ever brought together in the history of the country" were laid at a N. Y. City meeting, a followup of the Chicago Conference of Progressives. L. to r., at a press conference at the Hotel Commodore are: J. Raymond Walsh, chairman, N. Y. City PAC; Jo Davidson, chairman, Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts & Sciences; CIO Pres. Philip Murray, and Jack Kroll, director, CIO-PAC.

A SMELLY RECORD

ADD ONE more large item to the smelly record of the tory Republican-polltax Democrat combination which controlled the 79th Congress and made it an instrument of profiteering reaction to defeat the people's will.

This item is the greatly increased prices of meat and other essential commodities which are being decontrolled one after another following the lifting of meat controls.

It represents a further sharp cut in the living standards of all lower-income groups. It opens the door wide to inflation and to the depression and unemployment that always follow an inflationary "boom."

YET THE Congressional wreckers of price control are actually bragging of their handiwork and asking to be re-elected on this account.

They pointed to the meat shortage, caused by the meat trust's strike against the public, as an argument against price control. And when this strike for inflationary prices and unlimited profits was won, they hailed this defeat for the American people as their victory.

The meat hold-up, and its calamitous results in soaring living costs, were caused by the wrecking of the Price Control Act and the "price-holiday" brought about by the reactionary majority in Congress.

"The responsibility," President Truman rightly pointed out, "rests squarely on a few men in the Congress who, in the service of selfish interests, have been determined for some time to wreck price controls no matter what the cost might be to our people."

THE LIFTING of meat controls has not solved the meat shortage for any but the wealthy few. It is "relief for the greedy, but not for the needy."

"Millions of Americans will continue without meat in the months ahead," the CIO Cost of Living Committee declares, because "prices of meat are so high most workers' families will be unable to purchase any meat."

The Committee calls this "reverse rationing of an essential food." Instead of a fair share of limited supplies for all, according to their needs, there will be abundance only for the privileged few who need meat least, at the expense of the hard-working many who need it most.

EVERY TIME you go to the store to buy, or have to tighten your belt because you can't buy at present inflated prices, think of the reactionary members of Congress who are crowing over their wreckage of price control.

When you fear for your family's future, through threatening inflation and depression, think how these same Congressmen blocked adequate health, housing, social security, minimum wage and full employment legislation.

Think of their failure to pass the anti-poll-tax bill and to establish a permanent FEPC, of their vicious rampage for legislation to cripple labor unions, and of all the rest of their unsavory record.

CHECK THE record carefully on each member of Congress for whom you are asked to vote. Make sure of the stand of new candidates on these same issues.

If you will think and check enough, you will get mad enough to throw the rascals out, electing progressives in their place.

By the same token, your determination will be strengthened to re-elect those who have really fought the people's battles in Congress.

But, to do all this, the first essential today is to work and to organize to get out the vote on November 5.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

AS THE cat eating the canary said to the mouse: "Don't take alarm, be patient, I'll get around to you."

The guzzling and lip-smacking of the profiteers resounds through the land today.

The cooking of the banquet took a little time. The heat had to be turned on, the gravy prepared.

But now the lid has been lifted on prices and profits, and the fat boys are letting out their belts for a regular orgy.

THERE IS, however, a skeleton at the feast. It ruffles the composure of the profiteers, but doesn't interfere with their appetites.

They don't quite like the lean and hungry look on the face of labor. As Shakespeare said, "Such men are dangerous"—particularly when they've been robbed.

The rich man of the Biblical feast at least let the poor man eat the crumbs that fell from his table.

But the profiteers' press of today has only this advice to offer to labor:

"Be patient, wait awhile, don't ask for higher wages. Just work harder, tighten your belt, and if you can't afford the higher prices, don't eat. Let us enjoy our profit-feast in peace, and we'll get around to you later."

MOST ATTENTION has been directed to meat lately. But the meat trust was only the vanguard of the profiteers army.

When Truman finally surrendered to their offensive, lifting meat controls and promising a speedy end to other price controls, stocks of all kinds (not only those of the packers) shot upward at a record rate.

The profiteers won their victory over the American people through a gigantic hold-up.

Not only did they create an artificial shortage of meat, to destroy the meager remnants of price control, but they also withheld huge amounts of other goods from the market.

Philip Murray has called attention to Dept. of Commerce figures showing that present inventories of durable and non-durable goods total more than $37,000,000,000.

This record amount of goods has been hoarded to speculate on higher prices, and as part of the campaign to boost prices by destroying all price control.

FOR THIS victory of the profiteers, the American people are already paying in sky-leaping living costs.

But much worse is to follow, when the inflationary boom now being launched is followed by the inevitable bust.

Particularly hard hit is American labor. For, by June of this year, take-home pay of factory workers had declined 8½% since April, 1945, while increased living costs had cut real wages by more than 18%.

The latest victory of the profiteers means still further and deeper cuts in real wages and living standards.

THE POLITICAL uses being made of this situation are strange indeed.

If any politicians should hang their heads in shame, it is those who made up the Republican-tory-Democrat majority in Congress which started all the trouble.

Constantly stooging for big business, they encouraged the profiteers to hold up the American people for inflationary prices and profits.

But instead of hanging their heads, these reactionary politicians are crowing cock-a-doodle-doo, like foolish cocks who mistake the lightning of a coming storm for the dawn.

THE MOST ridiculous campaign claim so far is that of tory Republicans who seek to blame the Democrats for all the misdeeds of Congress, on the grounds of a technical Democratic Party majority.

Actually, Congress has long been ruled by a closely-knit alliance of Republicans and poll-tax Democrats. This Republocrat majority wrecked price control and blocked all progressive legislation.

Americans who don't like being tricked and misrepresented, robbed by higher prices to make a profiteers' holiday, and threatened with an inflationary boom-and-bust, have a chance to get even at the polls this November.

IMPERIL VETS' HOUSING

NOW that the price controls have been lifted on meat, a full scale attack has been launched for increasing the prices of building materials, and elimination of ceilings on rents and new homes.

Despite the fact that President Truman specifically named rent as one of the items on which controls have to remain "for a long time to come," the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards is calling for the end of such control.

It is taking the position that the shortage is not as great as U. S. housing authorities claim and that there woud be more doubling up if rents were unfrozen.

"The stenographer who used to live doubled up with another now has her own apartment. The situation is excellent, and we do not begrudge it—but it is certainly over-consumption of space due to rent control," a realtors' rlease said.

Both Housing Expediter Wilson W. Wyatt and R. J. Thomas, chairman of the CIO Committee on Housing and Community Development and vice-president of the CIO Auto Workers, are both alarmed by the situation, fearing that the Veterans Housing Program will be wrecked..

"Veterans and labor must now support all the more, continued tight control over prices and allocations of building materials to keep up the record-breaking start of the Veterans Housing Program. Otherwise, a further rise in building costs this winter will shut additional millions of veterans and their families out in the cold."

Thomas called for use of every OPA enforcement officer freed from enforcing food control to enforce compliance with orders issued to support production of veterans' housing.

He said that veterans and labor should demand that candidates for congress declare their support for continued strong controls in the veterans' housing program and for the Wagner general housing bill.

It was reported that Wyatt was planning to see President Truman to discuss the pressure of such decontrols are have been initiated thus far on housing prices and rents.

Two Families To Every House Is Realtors' Motto

Two families to every house appears to be the motto of the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards.

In a release this week the Realtors try to explain away the housing shortage as government propaganda. They are particularly bitter about the census bureau which they say considers two families living in a single-family house as having no private bath.

High Court Hears

CIO ON HATCH ACT

LEGALITY of the notorious Hatch Act, which bars federal employes from a wide variety of political and semi-political activities, is under study by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Arguing a case originally brought by 12 federal employes and by the then United Federal Workers, CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman called upon the court to remove the restrictions in the act. The Hatch act was passed in 1939 after a long campaign by reactionary papers against New Deal "bureaucrats."

Basic rights of free speech and free assemblage are denied to government employes by the Hatch act, the CIO attorney argued.

In a brief filed earlier with the high court, Pressman and Frank Donner, assistant counsel, claimed that the prohibitions contained in the act "are unduly sweeping . . . and are designed to suppress obvious exercises of rights of free expression without adequate justification."

Pointing out that in 1944 the government had on its payroll well over two million employes in almost every phase of work, the CIO brief charged that "a restriction reasonably designed to preserve the impartiality of a Collector of the Revenue, a U. S. Marshal, an FBI or Treasury agent, may be utterly absurd and unjustified when applied to a lens grinder, a stock clerk, a machinist or an elevator operator."

The CIO argument was leveled specifically at one sentence in the Hatch Act amendment of 1940 which bars federal employees from practicing almost every phase of political activity except the right to vote.

Among the prohibitions cited in the act are bans on writing or publishing any letters, articles or editorial "in favor of or against any political party, candidate, faction or measure," or voicing opinions at a "caucus, convention, a rally or other meeting."

The federal workers who first brought the suit into the courts were anxious, Pressman said, in his belief, to serve actively as citizens in the political life of their communities—from "ringing doorbells" to serving as party officials.

The appeals for relief from the Hatch act were heard in the U. S. District Court in 1944, and later that year that court ruled against them. The case is now before the Supreme Court on appeal from that ruling.

BUY U. S. HOUSES NOW—CIO

RESIDENTS of government housing projects now have the opportunity to acquire those properties through the formation of mutual associations. At least one mutually-owned project was sponsored by the CIO-Auto Workers. How the plan works was explained by Anna Berenson and John Edelman, who have just returned from the thirteenth annual meeting of Natl. Assn. of Housing Officials:

The Federal Housing Authority will stop plans to sell projects to anyone else for six months, as soon as any group can collect 25% of the signatures of the project residents.

If within this period, a majority of the residents become members of the mutual, formal negotiations for sale will be started, with payments of 5% of the cost of the projects paid by the association and the individual tenants required to make the transfer.

The balance of the purchase price may be paid off in 40 years at 3½% interest.

Miss Berenson and Edelman reported that the monthly charges to tenants should be no more and often less than present rentals.

UAW PLEADS FOR GI'S LIFE

President Truman was asked this week by Sec.-Treas. George F. Addes of the CIO Auto Workers to reverse the conviction and death sentence of Pvt. Lemas Woods, Jr.

Private Woods, a member of Local 208, UAW, Detroit, was sentenced to be hanged by an Army court martial in the Philippine Islands without any effort being made, according to Addes, to ascertain the true facts of the case.

Addes requested Secretary of War Patterson for a stay of execution some months ago and the union's investigation President Truman was told, "discloses that a mis-carriage of justice has taken place and an innocent man has been convicted of a terrible crime."

Attorneys, Addes said, have uncovered numerous important discrepancies in the testimony and the suppression of facts and other evidence which would definitely prove the innocence of Woods.

WORLD LABOR

CIO RELIEF donations have assisted more than 800 victims of the Nazis among the working population of tiny Luxembourg, according to a report by Anthony Luchek of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

Through representatives of the Luxembourg labor unions, needy families of union members have been selected and supplied with help from the gifts of American unionists.

On Labor Day Luxembourg workers showed their appreciation of CIO help by holding memorial services at the great U. S. military cemetery in Hamm and by placing flowers on the graves of CIO members among the thousands of GIs buried there.

* * *

AUSTRIAN WORKERS, faced with a sudden rise in the cost of living during recent weeks, have been striking frequently for higher wages and for repeal of a tax on wages first instituted during the Nazi regime.

Employes of the big Alpine Montan metal plant, one of Austria's largest, have threatened to sound the call for a shutdown of the entire metal and mining industry unless the government takes prompt action.

CZECH WORKERS are being given a real incentive to help restore production of badly needed commodities in their war-torn country. The Ministry of Finance has offered a bill—which will probably be passed—to relieve workers of income taxes on all money received for overtime work.

1 Lithography, or offset printing, is a method of transmitting an image from a photograph to a metal plate to paper. The first step in the process is photography of the object to be reproduced. Operating this "king size" color camera is James Ford, one of the highest paid employes of the Haynes Lithograph Co., Washington, D. C., which has a union shop contract with the CIO Amalgamated Lithographers. The camera costs $7,500. It uses 40" by 40" negatives. Exposures are made with a time clock and by removing a lens cover. An F12 lens is usually "stopped down" to F22 or F32. The camera can copy any object from the Lord's Prayer on the head of a pin up to a drawing 4' by 6'. Light thrown on copy is the equivalent of that from 250 100-watt bulbs. Focusing is done by a ground glass, at the back of the camera, on which the image is reflected.

4 A second photographic step in the lithographic process is performed by Charles Ritter, who operates a photo composing camera. For a multi-colored reproduction his job is to make certain that the colors are "justified" on the plates that go on the press—a separate one for each color. Like all other lithographic work, this requires the utmost in precision.

Here are a few of the 6000 CIO and AFL seamen whose demonstration in front of the N. Y. Times building caused the newspaper to repudiate an attack by its columnist and military expert, Hanson W. Baldwin, on the men who man the merchant ships.

WIDER SHIP STRIKE LOOMS

LEADERS of the CIO Committee for Maritime Unity are considering extending the strike against the ship owners, who, in turn, have staged a walkout. Committee officials point out that no effort has been made thus far to prevent the sailing from American ports of ships flying foreign flags.

The ship owners have walked out on the three unions which struck Oct. 1, when their contracts expired and the employers showed no disposition to meet their demands. The three unions are the Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. and the Longshoremen, both CIO, and the AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots.

It is now about two weeks since the Waterfront Employers Assn. of the Pacific Coast broke off negotiations at San Francisco with the Longshoremen over the union's request that a new agreement be made to replace the old pact covering coastwise vessels.

For over a week the East and the Gulf Coast ship owners have refused to meet with the MEBA negotiators in Washington, using as an excuse that no agreement could be reached until they completed negotiations with the MMP in N. Y. City. But that ceased to be an excuse, for they had not been meeting with the MMP for three days when the CIO NEWS went to press.

The West Coast interests, represented by the Pacific American Shipowners Assn., have failed to enter into bona fide negotiations since Sept. 27, the MEBA negotiating committee charged.

In his column he wrote that "there can be no merchant marine worthy of the name until men go to sea in large part for the love of it, instead of for a BS degree or something approaching a 40-hour week with time and a half for overtime."

The day the column appeared 8,000 rip-roaring mad seamen picketed the main building of the Times and its Times Square building.

Ringing the Times Building block they sang union songs and carried placards reading "Hanson Baldwin Distorts the Truth" and "Are 6,000 Dead Seamen Draft Dodgers?"

The union committee which consisted of representatives of the MEBA, the Natl. Maritime Union, the American Communications Assn., Marine Cooks & Stewards, the Shipbuilding Workers, all CIO, and the Marine Firemen, Watertenders & Oilers, unaffiliated but belonging to the CMU, demanded an apology from Managing Editor Edwin L. James.

At first he hedged, saying that he had no control over the editorial policy. After James and Turner Catledge of the paper's staff were told that the picketline would continue until the paper printed an apology and after they had heard merchant seamen tell of their experiences during the war, an agreement was reached.

James finally said that the Times would print the committee's protest, a news story on the demonstration, quotations from the paper's editorials lauding the merchant seamen's wartime record, and a declaration that these editorials still reflected the paper's policy.

Meanwhile, the MEBA on the advice of the Labor Dept. had told the East and Gulf Coast owners that as soon as an agreement with them was ratified by the membership they would sail their ships. Despite that proposal, there have been no meetings with the shippers since Oct. 10.

The MEBA negotiating committee in a telegram to Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach charged this week that Pres. J. B. Bryan of the Pacific American Shipowners Assn. lied when he declared that the union had refused to engage in discussions with the PASA representatives in Washington.

"The truth is as you know," the committee continued, "that the MEBA and the Dept. of Labor have failed since Sept. 27 to secure bona fide negotiations with the West Coast representatives."

The MEBA committee also charged that Frank J. Taylor, chairman of the committee of companies and agents for the East and the Gulf Coast, and his committee "have refused to accept your recommendations that the negotiations be resumed in Washington between the MEBA and the Committee for the East and the Gulf Coast ship owners. The union accepted."

The unions now say, and strike in demand, that the operator must take his officers from a list furnished by the unions. The unions now insist that they shall rotate employment among their members and between ships as they see fit, to remove a master here, place a mate there, drop an engineer somewhere else. They are attempting it along the Pacific Coast this week. The unions demand, in short, the right to determine who shall work where and when.

The CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. charges that this newspaper ad of the Pacific American Shipowners Assn., San Francisco, misrepresents the union's position. The union points out that it had signed an agreement with the East and Gulf Coast owners Oct. 1, calling for preferential employment for available and qualified MEBA members, for the right of the companies to select employes from the rolls of union members and for requiring members to remain in good standing.

In Clothing Industry

1/4 MILLION WIN LIVING BONUS

COST of living bonuses and other benefits have been won by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers for a quarter million employes in the men's and boy's clothing and cotton garment industries and in laundries, the union announced this week.

A $5 weekly bonus went to the largest group who received benefits—150,000 in the men's and boys' clothing industry, where a 65-c an hour minimum also was established. The bonus will be paid beginning Nov. 4.

Effective Oct. 14 was the $4 a week cost living bonus won by the Clothing Workers for 75,000 employes in the cotton garment industry—which includes shirt manufacture. Other improvements include an average 10-cent an hour increase, a second week's paid vacation after one year's employment and a 65-c an hour minimum.

The union announced that the terms of the agreement would be extended to independent manufacturers in the cotton garment field under contractural relations with Amalgamated.

For 25,000 laundry workers in Greater New York, Westchester and Long Island ACWA won an average cost of living bonus amounting to a 10% increase and a 40-hour week, effective Nov. 4, and a 66½c an hour minimum for female inside workers. The 40-hour week is established for female inside workers and hours were proportionately reduced for employes in other classifications.

ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky participated in the negotiations in the men's and boys' clothing and cotton garment industries. ACWA Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum was among those representing the union in the cotton garment and laundry negotiations.

AFL Letters Show

JIM CROW AT WORK

NEGROES will continue to have second-class membership in the AFL Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

That is shown by an exchange of letters between Brotherhood Pres. George M. Harrison and a brotherhood division chairman, P. R. Flynn, Chicago, over CIO organizational efforts among Negro employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Chicago. The correspondence was made public this week by Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employes.

Flynn spurns Harrison's suggestion that Negro workers, now consigned to auxiliaries, be granted full membership in the brotherhood and asserts that this proposal was "repudiated by the entire membership of Garfield Lodge without a dissenting vote."

Harrison in his letter complains that the railroad "discriminates in favor of Negro help. Since the close of the war the railroad company could recruit white labor and thereby restore the pre-war ratio but the railroad representatives have failed to do this."

VOTE DRESS DISTRICT STRIKE

Eight hundred textile workers, members of the CIO Wholesale & Warehouse Union, Local 65, voted this week to call a general strike in New York City's textile industry. The strike, involving thousands of workers—organized and unorganized—will have widespread effects throughout the city's garment industry as the supply of goods to dress manufacturers is choked off.

General strike action was taken after a two-week period during which the union had pursued a one-at-a-time strike policy. Twenty-four firms signed with the union during this period while 23 were out on strike. The present strike affects close to 200 shops which had been under contract with Local 65.

The textile workers voted originally on October 1 to take strike action when the Assn. of Uptown Converters, representing 120 firms under contract with the union, rejected Mayor O'Dwyer's compromise.

OUT 25 weeks and still going strong—Allis-Chalmers workers at a plant-gate rally Sunday at the main works, West Allis, Wis., cheered the bargaining comittee and pledged to hold out until victorious..

FORD SCHEME

Use of poisonous sodium fluoride to speed up steel manufacture at the Ford Motor Co. plant in Detroit stopped production for 12 days in the open hearth when crane operators refused to stay on the job because the company was violating the health provisions of its contract with the CIO Auto Workers.

The men went back to work this week when it was agreed by the company that the powder would be used only in a test case to determine the health hazards involved.

Ford Local 600 also demanded that all penalties imposed on those who refused to work under the hazardous conditions be rescinded.

Henry Ford 2nd, Ford Motor Co. president, took advantage of the work stoppage to send a telegram to CIO Pres. Philip Murray in which he blamed "insurgent and subversive factions" for the refusal of the crane operators to work.

Murray replied that UAW Vice-Pres. Richard T. Leonard had informed him "that certain of the employes concerned are working under extremely hazardous conditions affecting health and life."

CIO WINS 24

Employes of 24 Southern industrial plants, including seven in Mississippi, chose CIO unions as their collective bargaining agencies last week, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee reported.

"Five of the Mississippi plants, which make clothing, are under the same ownership and our victory in them was particularly significant because the workers' organizational efforts met strenuous opposition," Bittner said.

"The CIO was attacked in full-page newspaper advertisements sponsored by the company, as well as by a 'Citizens' Committee.' We were attacked in leaflets signed by a minister, and in leaflets circulated by the 'Citizens' Committee.' The local newspapers joined in the fight against us, condemning the CIO in both news and editorial columns."

Allis-Chalmers

FAILS TO KILL UNIONS

By ESTHER HANDLER

Two events highlighted Allis-Chalmers strike picture this week. The membership of the Farm Equipment Local at La Porte, Ind., ratified an agreement with the company, ending a 213-day strike, while membership of CIO Local Industrial Union 1424 at La Crosse rejected two to one the proposed agreemtn and voted to stay on strike.

Strikes continue strong at Boston, and in Wisconsin at La Crosse and West Allis. Settlements have been reached at Pittsburgh, Norwood, Ohio; Springfield, Ill. and La Porte, Ind.

All agreements signed contain 13½ cent wage increases in addition to a five cent boost, retroactive to April 1944, won last winter; special adjustments for rate workers, and wage reopening clauses. Contracts run for two years but some provide that increases granted workers at West Allis, Pittsburgh, and Boston plants will also obtain at the remaining plants.

Ranks are solid at remaining strikebound plants despite stepping up of company's vicious strikebreaking activities. Although bargaining is going day and night before federal conciliator at main works in West Allis, the company has not yet moved on a single key issue.

The firm is throwing its main energy into activities designed to break the Auto Workers local at West Allis and remove its leadership. The Milwaukee Hearst press is conducting daily front page smear campaigns against the union leaders in an attempt to force out the present bargaining committee. At an overflow meeting last Sunday the union membership unanimously voted suspension and trial of leader of a company inspired revolt and voted full support to present bargaining committee.

WOOD UNION CONVENTION

To correct possible misinterpretations of the news agency story on the convention of the Intl. Woodworkers of America, which appeared in the Sept. 23 issue of The CIO News, Manley J. Wilson, editor of the Intl. Woodworker, has sent us the following additional information:

"The action of the convention on the amalgamation of the IWA with the Furniture Workers did not definitely provide for such amalgamation," he writes, "inasmuch as the report made by the negotiating committee was to the effect that negotiations between the two organizations are not yet complete.

"The convention action was simply to continue such negotiations with a view to concluding negotiations prior to the next convention. The selection of St. Louis as the 1947 convention city was based on other considerations rather than the proposed amalgamation."

Wilson also calls attention to a subsequent statement by IWA Pres. James E. Fadling designed to clarify the convention resolution which stated: "Ours is a democratic organization. It is run by its members and for its members. We ask no man his national origin, his color, his religion or his political beliefs. It is enough for us that he is a woodworker and that he believes in trade unionism."

Fadling declares that "some people, especially labor-baiting employers, reactionaries, who put their political philosophies ahead of their trade unionism, and the AFL have attempted to interpret this resolution as meaning the IWA has opened its doors to crackpot political and economic philosophies.

"Nothing is further from the truth," he says, calling attention to another convention resolution "opposing the policies of the Ku Klux Klan, Fascist, Nazi and Communist Parties."

TOMORROW'S CITIZENS By Rose H. Alschuler

WHY IS IT IMPORTANT TO GIVE CHILDREN RESPONSIBILITY? From the time children are born, we need to think about and plan for the time they will become independent. Increasing their ability to manage themselves in all kinds of situations and allowing them to take as much responsibility as possible helps prepare them—and ourselves—for their adolescence. Every situation which they learn to handle independently and with competence increases the chance of their becoming effective and soundly mature adults.

Book Review

A WHITE WOMEN LOOKS AT RACE HATE

By Hollace Ransdell

MARGARET Halsey's new book "Color Blind" is a serious work on a very serious subject—race prejudice—yet it is so lively and interesting that once started on it, you won't be able to put it down until it's finished.

It is a fascinating book that every CIOer should read, especially those who are troubled about anti-Negro remarks they hear their friends and fellow unionists make.

The stories in the book illustrating the problem of Negro-white relations are drawn from Miss Halsey's experiences during the war as a captain of hostesses in the Stage Door Canteen which had a policy of no discrimination against Negro servicemen.

For support in arguing on the injustice done to the Negro, Miss Halsey says she relies largely in touchy situations on "a couple of weatherbeaten documents called the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence" to help out. It is comforting to note, she adds, that "these antique documents still have a good deal of prestige and influence."

Those timid souls, Miss Halsey says, who are afraid to practice real democracy toward the Negro because it may cause "trouble" are pretty much on the same level as the Ku Klux Klan in being an instrument for keeping the Negro American a second-class citizen.

ANYBODY who has ever attempted to reason with a person filled with race prejudice will get a big sense of satisfaction on reading the frank, sensible, straight forward way "Color Blind" tackles the myths, old wives' tales and fairy stories upon which this prejudice is based.

Discussing the legend about sex and the Negro, for instance, so often brought up by otherwise sensible, decent people, Miss Halsey says: "Nobody on God's green footstool could sell these people stock in a phony gold mine, but when the issue is sex and Negroes, they sit with their mouths open like fledgling birds and swallow whatever is dropped in."

ONE of the outstanding merits of "Color Blind" is the wise and simple advice the book gives people who honestly want to get over their race prejudices. As Miss Halsey told the young hostesses at the canteen, who admitted the justice of anti-discrimination, but said they couldn't overcome their feelings—the way to get rid of a prejudice is to take it gradually, through a series of experiences, just as you develop a muscle through exercise.

Miss Halsey's sound observations based on her own experiences make "Color Blind" a particularly timely and helpful book today when our democracy is on trial before the world. It should become a best-seller. The Book Find Club, 401 Broadway, New York 13, has already chosen "Color Blind" as its selection for November.

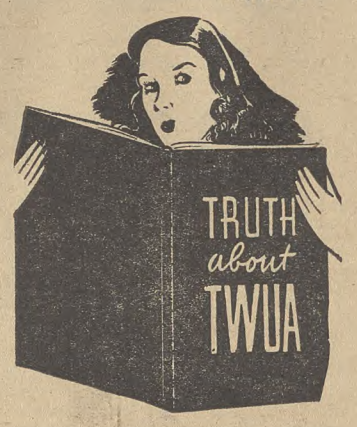
WOMEN AT WORK

What every woman should know



THE CIO Textile Workers Union, almost half of whose 400,000 members are women, has just published a striking leaflet that should have great appeal for women working in the textile industry. It's called "What every Woman Should Know—Truth about TWUA."

Women are good workers. They turn out as much work as men. They put in as many hours as men. Therefore they are entitled to the same pay as men. But many employers pay them less for doing the same job.

The CIO Textile Workers, the largest textile union in the world, insists on equal pay for equal work for women. In 1,500 mills in 34 states and Canada, covered by TWUA contracts, women get equal pay.

The union fights for the same promotions, the same job security, the same seniority rights for women as for men. For its women members it also insists on rest periods, paid lunch periods, health insurance paid for by employers, and maternity benefits.

" You are a woman," states the leaflet. "You may be planning to work for just a year. Maybe you will work for two years or ten years. But as long as you work, you are entitled to all the job benefits a man would get if he had your job . . .

" You want to help yourself and other workers—both men and women—get better wages, better working conditions."

Some 150,000 copies of this and other leaflets of various subjects have been sent to the South for general distribution at mill gates.

PROTEST NEWARK COP VIOLENCE

Local 668 of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers this week appealed to Public Safety Commissioner Keenan of Newark, N. J., to end the police beating of strikers at the three plants of the Baker and Co., reputed to be the world's largest refiners of precious metals.

Thirteen strikers have been arrested on charges of interfering with the police during the first eleven days of the walkout. Those arrested include seven veterans and Rudy Hanson, MMSW regional director.

MEAT FOR THE RICH

was 100% over that of a week ago, and the run of hogs 1,000% higher.

Prices fluctuated wildly. In Chicago, cattle, hog and sheep prices staged the greatest one-day advances in the meat industry's history. Top grade hogs jumped from $16.25 a hundred pounds to $27.50. Cattle prices reached $28.75 a hundred pounds, short of the all-time record of $30.25 set last August during the price control holiday, but $8.50 over the former ceiling.

THE HUGE flow of cattle to market added additional evidence to already substantial proof that the "shortage" of meat was a myth.

• In Denver, the American Natl. Livestock Assn. revealed that the cattle population as of last Jan. 1 had increased far beyond the point normally considered safe for maintaining high prices. The total of 79,791,000 was 2,500,000 above the "safe" figure, the association reported.

• In Washington, Sec. of Agriculture Anderson said: "At the present time the number of beef cattle on farms and ranches is dangerously high, and this condition will become worse unless liberal marketings for slaughter are resumed without delay."

Previous to the order decontrolling meat, two business papers had, by inference, debunked the tale of shortages. The Wall Street Journal admitted that the meat famine was "an endurance contest to show how long the public will do without meat before forcing the Administration to heave controls out the window." The Chicago Journal of Commerce said that "intensively fed cattle will be held until the lid is off, whether this comes Nov. 1 or June 30."

The report had nationwide significance in view of the fact that the Dept. of Justice is considering the reopening of an investigation, begun in 1945, of packers' monopoly practices outlawed in a consent decree of 1920. The packers then were forbidden to control stockyards and retail distribution outlets which they had used to rig the price of meat.

Additional complaints, however, have come to the Department's anti-trust division. Should the packers be found guilty of such collusion to boost profits, they would be subject to a citation for contempt of court with heavy fines—and possibly jail sentences, although these have rarely been imposed on big industrialists.

PACKERS' profits—led by the "Big Four"—jumped from 106% to 241% from 1941-1945 under price control, compared with the prewar years, 1936 to 1940. Here's the lineup:

Armour	241%
Swift	106%
Wilson	176%
Cudahy	189%

Typical of net profits during the first half of 1946, under price control, were those of Armour, whose profits for the first half of 1946 were $9,700,000, exceeding the $8,972,000 for the entire top war profit year of 1945!

DESPITE this enormous gain, the packers, according to President Truman, have deliberately withheld meat from the market in order further to fatten their pocketbooks. In a report to the nation, he said:

"Many businessmen have held on to the products they would normally sell, gambling on the possibility of the release of price control and the opportunity for greater profits.

"This has been conspicuously true in the case of meat. The American people will not condone the conduct of those who, in order further to fatten their profits, are endangering the health of our people by holding back vital foods, which are now ready for market and for which the American people are clamoring.

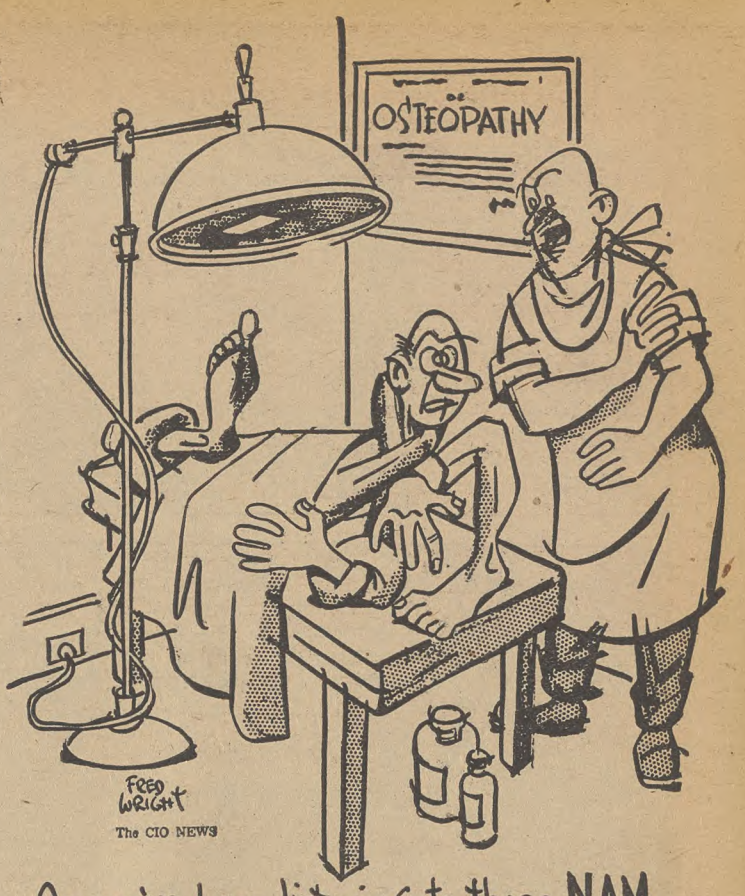
"The real blame, however, lies at the door of the reckless group of selfish men, who, in the hope of gaining political advantage, have encouraged sellers to gamble on the destruction of price control."

Other statements came from:

• The CIO Cost of Living Committee: "Prices of meat are so high most workers' families will be unable to purchase any meat. Senators Taft and Wherry will not hunger for the lack of protein, but millions of miners, railroad, steel and other workers will lack important ingredients in their diet."

• The Consumer Advisory Committee of OPA: "Consumers have a two-fold task—to work to maintain the necessary controls which still remain, especially on building materials and rent . . . and to use their power as consumers to resist inflationary prices on uncontrolled products."

Walter Reuther and Ralph Helstein, presidents, respectively, of the CIO Auto and Packinghouse Workers, sharply criticized the strike of the meat trust and called for action at the polls Nov. 5 to repudiate those Congressmen who wrecked price control.



So you've been listening to those NAM broadcasts again!

FARM-LABOR UNITY URGED

Pointing out that the same monopoly forces are at work to wreck the peace and to drive small farmers to ruin, the 30th convention of the Iowa Farmers Union, meeting last week at Des Moines, urged the promotion of farmer-labor unity and cooperation against the common enemy.

Extension of U. S. monopolies into world markets under the protection of a world-wide American military force is costing the American people $18 billion a year, the farmers said, blasting "the Morgans, Mellons, duPonts, Pews and Herbert Hoovers with their program of economic and financial domination which they politely term an 'American Century.'"

They expressed their full support of the foreign policy position "so courageously taken by Henry A. Wallace in his letter to President Truman regarding a return to fundamental principles of world peace."

Instructing its state board to set up a state labor relations committee and subordinate county and local committees, the convention said the family-type farmers of America will be pushed out of the picture by the 43 billion-dollar corporations that dominate the country unless they ally themselves with the labor movement.

NEW JERSEY OUTLAWS KLAN

Ku Klux Klaners in New Jersey will have to put their bedsheets away in mothballs.

Outlawing of the terrorist organization was ordered here last week by Supreme Court Justice A. Dayton Oliphant after testimony from State Atty. Gen. Walter D. Van Riper that the KKK's objectives were "improper" and that it had been linked with the German-American Bund.

BACK ANNUAL WAGE

The principle of the guaranteed annual wage has been endorsed by the Fraternal Order of Eagles. The organization, at its recent national convention, also urged:

Establishment of State rehabilitation clinics to train workers who have suffered crippling industrial accidents, and passage of a more realistic full employment bill, recommending that the organization "lend its voice to the achievement of a greater acceptance of this basic precept of the 'right to a job'."

HALT GOP RENT PROFITEERS

GET OUT THE VOTE NOV. 5!

Your rent and your vote on November 5 are as closely connected as bread and butter.

A vote for big-business Republican candidates on November 5 is a vote for higher rents on January 1.

A dangerous alliance of big landlords and realtors, big bankers and insurance interests, powerful Republican leaders and a few "yes-men" among the southern polltaxers, are bent on smashing rent control.

The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, spearhead of this movement, is publicly on record with a new demand for a 15% rise in rents. That would mean a 5% immediate jump in the cost of living for the average American family.

The fight against the big packers and the Republican tories who forced decontrol of meat is being led in Omaha, Neb., by the CIO Iowa-Nebraska Council Women's Auxiliary. Mrs. Phyllis Goodman (center) signs a petition circulated by Auxiliary Pres. Mrs. Maurice Cronin (l.) and Mrs. F. J. Gallagher, chairman, Omaha League of Women Shoppers.

IT'S UP TO YOU!

If you're 100 percent in this election—

- You have made a last minute check in your plant of all registered voters.
- You have called your PAC Committee together and said: "This is it, boys and girls! November 5th is around the corner. Are we ready to see to it that everyone in our plant who is registered votes?"
- You have received or given your last instructions in your wards and precincts. You have sent out a call for as many canvassers as you can get for November 5th. Your wife is in it, your sister, niece, and mother-in-law, too. Everybody is set to go for the big turn-out of the biggest vote ever.
- Your sound trucks are ready; your posters are in place; your poll-watchers have their instructions.
- You who have cars have already signified that you will help bring the aged and the handicapped in the neighborhood to the polls.
- You have talked about voting to your neighbors, to your club members, to your friends in church, to your grocer.
- You remember the politician who said: "Many close elections have been won by the election district workers bringing in four, five, six or more additional votes to the polls during the closing hours."

But don't wait for the closing hours. Start early and keep getting voters to vote until the polls are closed.

You have done all this—and we're in.

Kroll Charges

GOP TORIES BETRAYED CAMPAIGN PROMISES

ATTACKING Republican leaders for "betrayal of campaign pledges," Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, this week cited the GOP failure to support the Fair Employment Practices Act as proof of a deliberate policy to deceive American voters.

Calling attention to this and other "betrayals by the GOP brass-hats," the PAC chief called for a large vote on Election Day to defeat those "who would plunge us into another Hoover depression."

"In its 1944 platform, the Republican party promised to establish by federal legislation a permanent FEPC," Kroll said. "This act is vital to labor because it prohibits job discrimination on the basis of religion, race or national origin.

"The GOP merely used the popularity of this measure to gain votes, for when the real test came to get the FEPC bill out of committee, where it had been bottled up, 118 Republicans out of 183 in the house refused to sign the discharge petition," Kroll decared.

Further revealing the "GOP sham," he pointed to the GOP plank—"Our goal is to prevent hardship and poverty in America"—and said, "Today this party, following the Herbert Hoover philosophy, is depressing the living standards of the American people and cutting deep into their pay envelopes by forcing prices upward and instituting a drive to lift all rent controls. As Republican prices go higher and higher there will be more hardship and poverty in America."

THE PAC chief charged that the Republican stand on rent ceilings makes their pledges sound even more hollow. He declared that low-income tenants would be doomed to permanent homlessness if left to the mercy of greedy landlords.

When Sen. Albert Hawkes (Rep. N. J.) introduced an amendment to the Price Control Extension Action to increase rents 15%, nine Republican Senators approved it.

Another GOP-sponsored amendment to do away with OPA rent controls in those states having a rent control law met with the approval of thirty-one Republican Senators.

"They voted for state control because they knew such restrictions would be weaker and easier to circumvent," commented Kroll.

THE GOP was further criticized for having maintained a negative attitude on medical care. The 1944 GOP platform pledged support of the "stimulation by federal aid of state plans to make medical and hospital service available to those in need without disturbing doctor - patient relationship or socializing medicine."

Kroll asserted that liberal Democrats like Wagner, Murray and Dingell have sponsored a bill that would carry out these objectives.

The Republicans, led by Senator Taft, have fought this bill by smearing it falsely as "socialistic." The party's real lack of interest in better health facilities is shown by the fact that it has put forth no proposal as a substitute for this legislation, he said.

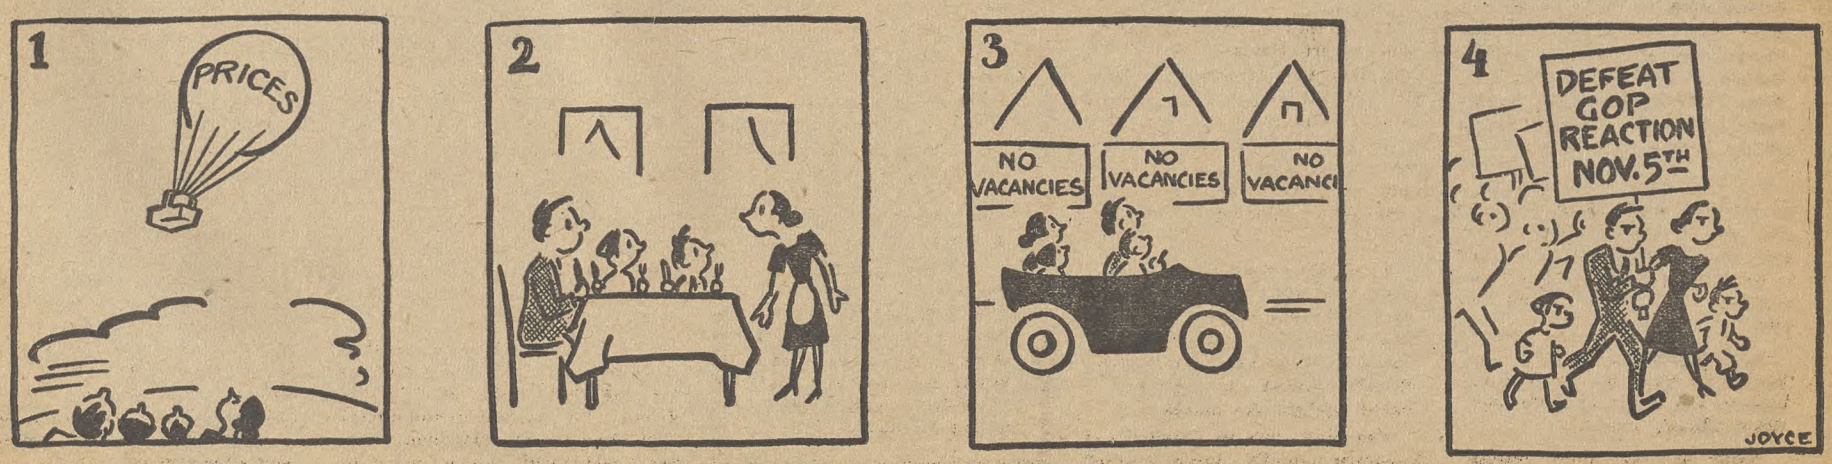
THE GOP platform stated that it accepted the purpose of the Wages and Hours Act and promised a "fair and just administration of these laws."

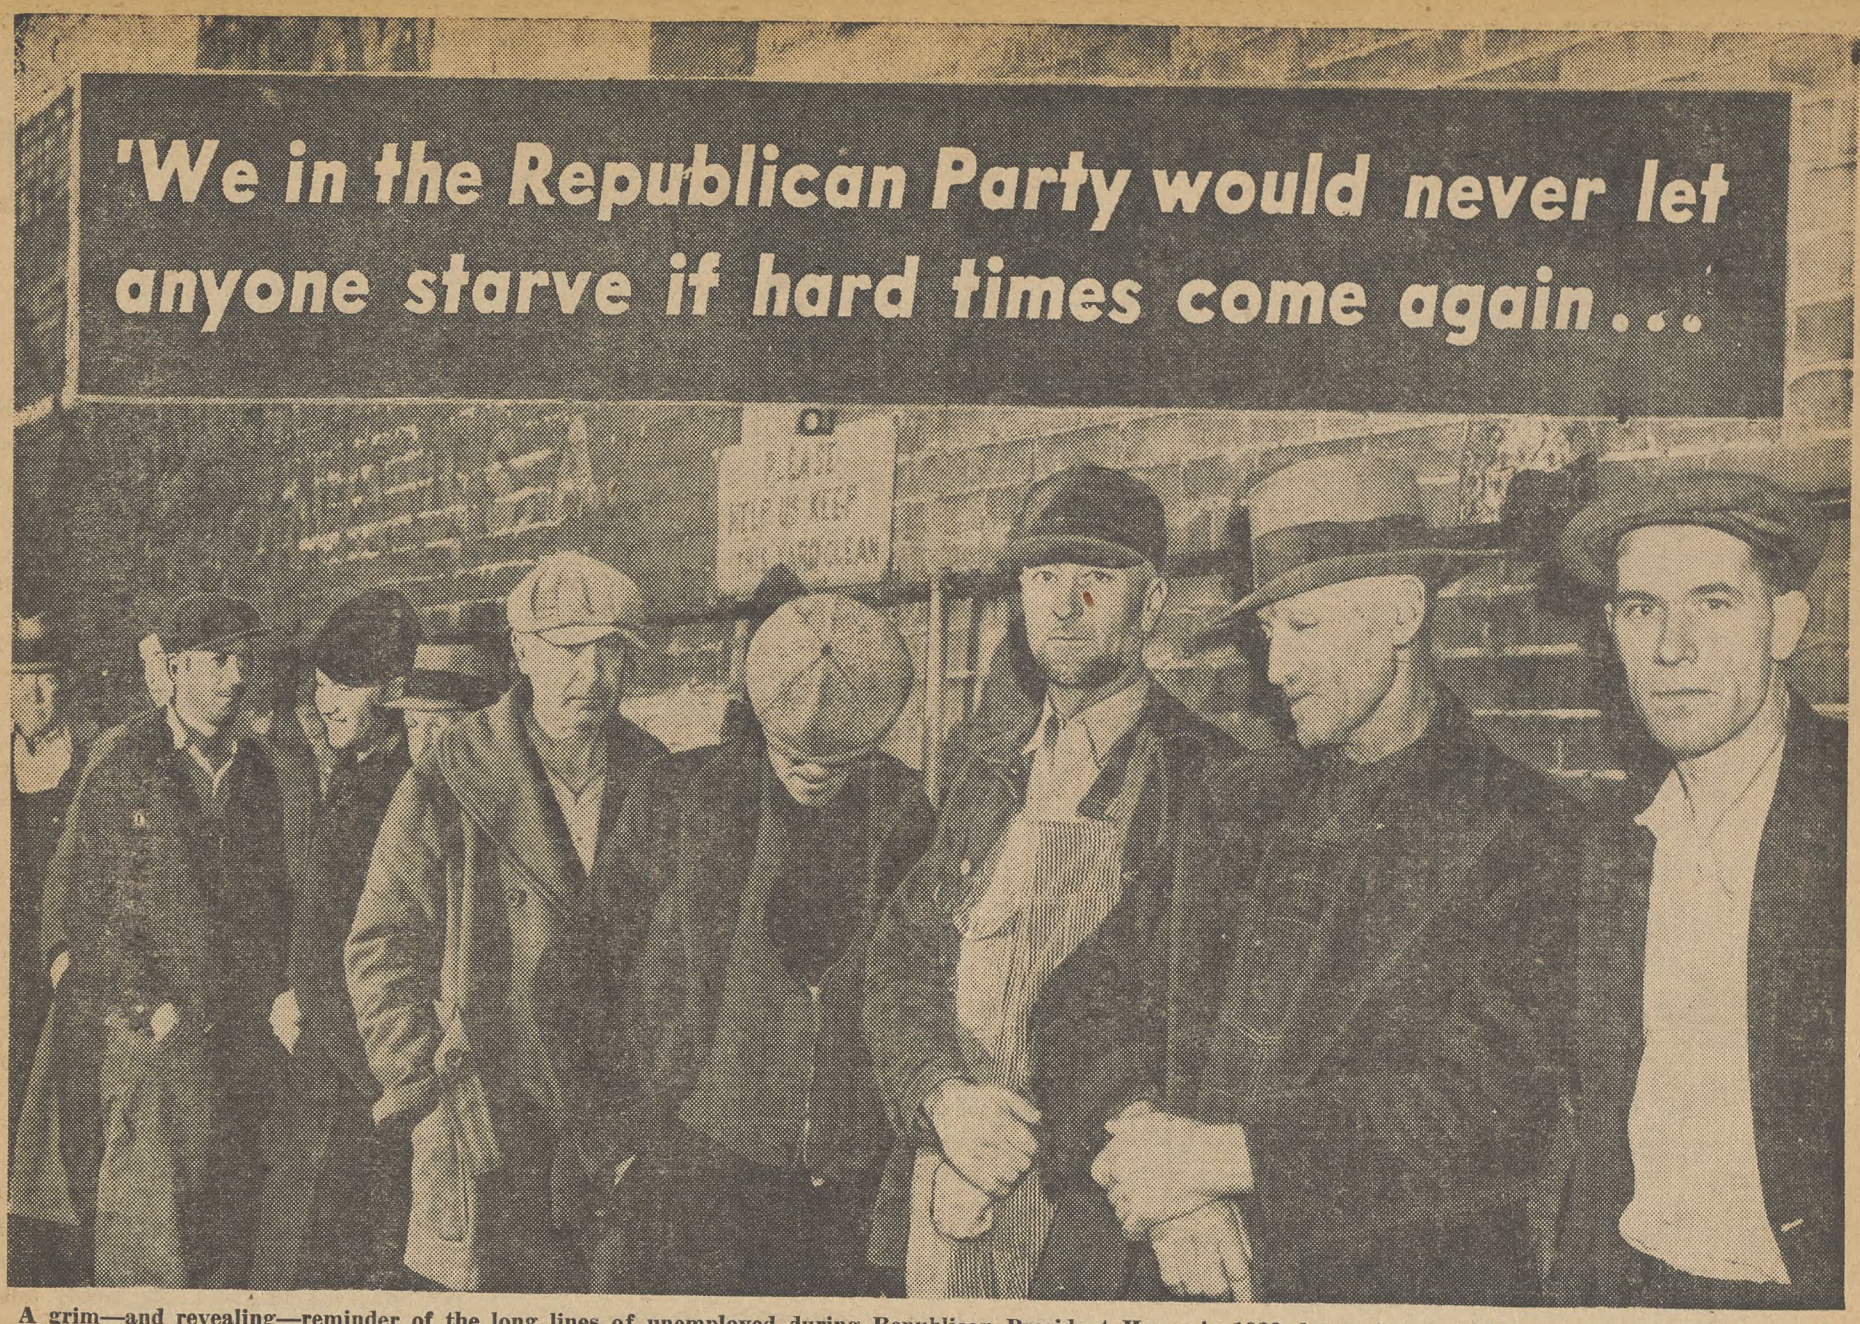
Kroll recalled that the Republicans had not only bitterly opposed the 65c minimum wage bill introduced in the 79th Congress, but had even fought a 25c hourly minimum originally provided in the 1938 Wages and Hours Act. Thirteen GOP Senators had voted against this proposal in 1938, while only two favored it, Kroll said.

The PAC head branded as "pure hypocrisy" the GOP promise to accept the purpose of the Natl. Labor Relations Act with the pledge of a fair and just administration of the law.

Pointing to the Republican-sponsored Case anti-labor bill, which would have nullified much of the Labor Relations Act, Kroll said, "If that bill had become law, the Wagner Labor Act protection would have been cut to the bone and labor's right to organize and strike would have been virtually abolished." The Case measure had the support of 149 Republicans in the House and 33 Republicans in the Senate.

"I am convinced that this sort of hypocritical lip service to the people's needs will not hoodwink American voters into the Republican column. On November 5 there must be a record vote cast—and cast against empty campaign promises."





A grim—and revealing—reminder of the long lines of unemployed during Republican President Hoover's 1929 depression was the comment this week of GOP senatorial candidate Thomas Sweeney of West Virginia. In a debate with Sen. Harley M. Kilgore, Democrat, supported by CIO-PAC, Sweeney said, "We in the Republican Party would never let anyone starve if hard times come again . . ." This, said Kilgore, is the Republican "platform." It was mighty shaky in '29!

GOP PLUNDERBUND ON RENT HIKE RAMPAGE

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE nation's big real estate groups, closely aligned to the Republican party, started this week to throw the dice in earnest in a mad gamble to blow the ceiling off rent controls and squeeze hundreds of millions of additional dollars from the American public.

With elections less than a fortnight away, the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards renewed its drive for a 15% rise in rents on the phoney issue of providing "justice and emergency relief" to organized landlords — now more prosperous than ever before in history.

Meanwhile "Charlie McCarthy" subsidiaries of the NAREB began to beat the tom-toms throughout the country, with threats of landlord "strikes" to keep vacated apartments empty until OPA controls have fallen to the greedy onslaught.

The CIO Political Action Committee was quick to answer the real estate multi-million dollar grab with charges that the GOP is collaborating "in a traitorous attempt to remove ceilings on rent."

"This is the most unfair thing I've ever heard of. Those guys are forgetting the boys who kept those apartments safe for them."

In a detailed analysis of the situation, CIO-PAC warned that the Republican victory in the meat-ceiling fight foreshadowed "Republican rents" at highly increased levels if the Republicans win Nov. 5.

"Only a tremendous vote turnout against Republican rents and prices can save the last remnants of our dollar bills," declared Jack Kroll, PAC director.

OFFICIALS of PAC recalled that on two previous occasions the Republicans had sought to legislate rent controls into the garbage pail.

One of these efforts was led by Sen. Albert Hawkes (R. N. J.), who filed an amendment to force OPA to lift all rent ceilings by 15%. The proposal mustered only 14 votes, the overwhelming majority of which came from Republicans, with a few polltax Democrats uttering the usual "me too."

A second proposal, by Sen. Knowland (R. Cal.) was passed in the Senate, thanks again to the Republican and "me too" votes. Only one Republican Senator—Aiken of Vermont—voted against the measure.

"The mad rush to plunder the consumer-tenant's purse is on," PAC charged, "and the Republicans intend to help the landlords get their share of the booty."

IN HALF a dozen cities, associations of apartment house owners—many of them tied to the local Republican machines — are conducting landlord sitdowns. Apartments are being kept unoccupied, despite the pressing need of millions of families, until the owners wring concessions from OPA or see the price control agency's doom written in a swarm of reactionary victories at the polls.

The widely publicized landlord's "strike" in Seattle was labeled by some OPA officials as the "beginning of what may be a national movement by real estate people."

The "renting strike" by two powerful groups of Seattle apartment house owners—who cotnrol most of the apartment space in the northwest city—was planned by men who have worked closely with the Republican party, and have been consistent foes of every form of price control.

Members of the Pioneer Apartment Group—one of the two striking landlords' associations—passed two resolutions:

1. To rent no vacant apartments until rent controls are killed.

2. To vote the straight Republican ticket.

Pres. J. H. Totten of the Pioneer landlords offered the motion for support of GOP reactionary candidates after declaring:

"We are not sure all the Republicans are against OPA, but we do know that all Democratic candidates are for it."

The more powerful Seattle Apartment Owners Assn. picked up the ball from the Pioneer group. Its secretary announced that the national apartment owners trade outfit—which meets in Oklahoma City in mid-November —will call for national anti-tenant action.

In Baltimore, Md., George W. Proffitt, executive secretary of the national organization, voiced a strong prediction that the outfit's convention would take action similar to that in the northwest.

THE NAREB has a three-point program:

- An immediate increase of 15% in residential rents "as a matter of fundamental justice and emergency relief" to allegedly poverty-stricken landlords.
- A plan to free from all controls those landlords who would give tenants a year's lease at a 15% increase in rent.
- Immediate elimination of all price ceilings and rent controls on new residential construction.

The firm controls on rent levels —the most effective of any handled by OPA—have permitted an increase of only 4% since the beginning of the war, government officials maintain.

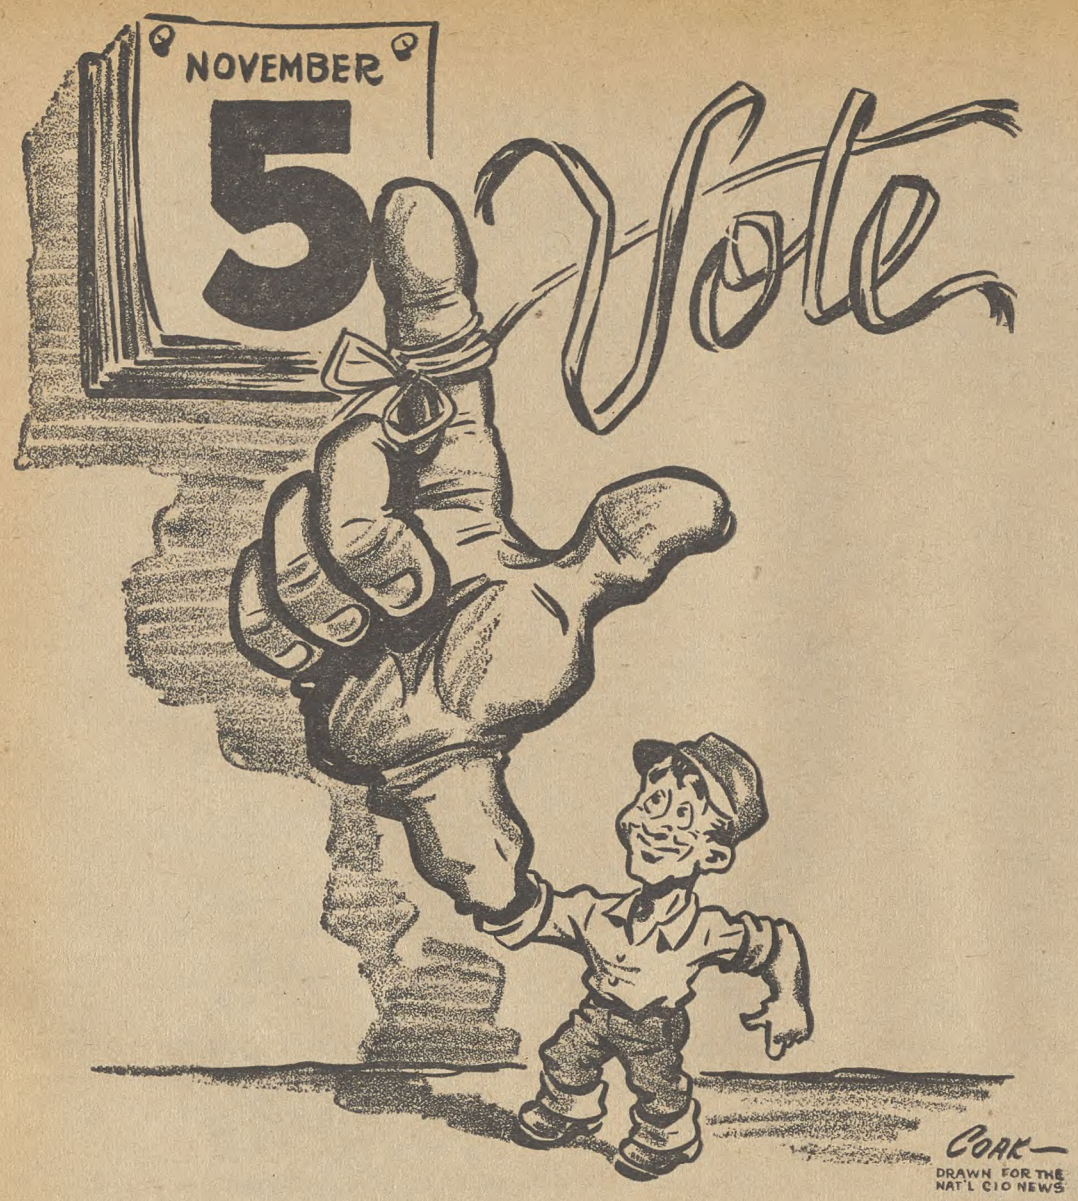
A 15% rise would jump the cost of living 3% to 6% for most families, whose budget usually provides for from 20% to 40% of their total income for housing. Such a rise would bring widespread hardship to millions of families straining to make both ends meet under the existing situation of jumping consumer prices.

Across The River

Canada has firm price controls. The government has resisted all efforts to weaken those controls. As a result, prices have stayed down.

But at Niagara Falls, N. Y., U. S. housewives—thanks to the attack on OPA by the meat lobby and GOP leaders—pay $1 to $1.25 a pound for steak, 98c a pound for butter.

At Niagara Falls, Ontario—just across the river — Canadian housewives pay 45c a pound for T-bone steaks, 45c a pound for butter.



HAD ENOUGH? VOTE PAC

HAD ENOUGH? Frankly yes. We've had our belly full of tory Republican rule in Congress. We want a change.

This rule hasn't been the least sweetened by the incidental fact that it has depended upon the complicity of tory polltax Democrats.

For all-too-many years Congress has been ruled and ridden by this predominantly Republican combination.

It has constituted a reactionary majority which has constantly overriden a minority bloc of progressive Democrats aided by a little handful of liberal Republicans.

★ ★ ★

Since his death, it has grown even more arrogant and powerful.

In the 79th Congress, it defeated the administration right down the line in the latter's none-too-aggressive efforts to carry forward the Roosevelt program.

It is responsible for the sorry record of that Congress—for the wrecking of price control; for sky-high prices and lowered real wages; for anti-labor legislation; for continuance of the polltax and ending of the FEPC; for failure to raise the minimum wage and to take any adequate steps for the health, housing, social security and full employment of the American people.

Yes, we've had enough — more than enough.

WHAT HAS tory Republican rule done to your dollar?

A dollar ain't a dollar any more. The Bureau of Labor Statistics has been criticized by labor for grossly underestimating increased living costs. But even its figures show the purchasing power of the dollar shrunk to 69 cents, from January 1941 to Sept. 15, 1946.

Since then, the tory Republicans have been able to boast of still further victories over the American people, by forcing the lifting of practically all price controls.

So by Nov. 5 your dollar will probably be worth about four-bits. They'll offer you two-bits or less for your dollar, if you care to vote for them.

HAD ENOUGH Republican-cum-tory-Democrat rule?

If you want more, you can give this old gang a chance to cap its wrecking of price control by the destruction of rent controls, which will be next on the agenda, if it is returned with a strengthened majority.

If you want more, you can have still tougher anti-labor legislation to wreck unions and keep wages down, while prices and profits soar.

If you want more, put in the tory Republicans again and, with the polltax Democrats already assured of election, they'll have a big enough majority to cook up another Hoover depression.

BUT IF you've really had enough and don't want any more, then VOTE.

If you forget to vote, or can't bother to vote, you will let the old tory gang ride in again by default, stronger than ever.

If you've had enough and want a better deal in the future, vote out the anti-labor wreckers of price control, vote in again the progressives who have fought the people's fight—and add to their number so they may become a majority in the next Congress.

Sure, your vote alone can't do it—though it can't be done without your vote—so get all your family, your neighbors and your friends to vote as well.

Join with your union and the PAC in organizing to get out a record vote. The time is short. Get busy NOW.

Had enough? Then vote progressive, vote for PAC-endorsed candidates, and get others to vote.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

IF YOU don't bother about your future, don't bother to vote on Nov. 5.

The old gang that ran the 79th Congress will look after you—and how!

They've already got your future doped out, if they can count on you not to vote.

(They aren't counting on many trade unionists being so dumb as to vote for them, but your uncast ballot will have the same effect).

Although in a technical minority in the 79th Congress, the Republicans actually had their way in every important vote, due to their close alliance with a minority of tory Democrats.

So a GOP majority in both Houses would not change the control of Congress. It would simply strengthen the old gang's control, and make it easier for them to dish out more and worse of the same.

★ ★ ★

THIS IS the kind of future the old gang has doped out for you:

Having wrecked price control in the last Congress and having made you pay higher prices for nearly everything, it would finish the job by boosting prices still further on everything.

What's more, the landlord's lobby is not voting tory Republican for nothing. So you can expect to pay double rent, if the old gang is returned strong enough to abolish rent control.

★ ★ ★

BUT IF all living costs are boosted still higher, at least we should be able to raise wages proportionately, you may say.

The old gang has the answer to that one too. Not for nothing is it so ardently supported by big business.

Remember how the GOP-tory Democrat old gang passed the Case bill in the last Congress? It was only the minority of progressives that prevented it from being enacted over the President's veto.

All the old gang needs is a few more votes to enact this or similar legislation to cripple the unions and render them incapable of raising wages adequately.

HIGHER PRICES and rents and lower wages aren't all you can expect, if you let the architects of the Hoover depression get back into the saddle.

All competent economists are predicting a bust after the inflationary boom of sky-high prices and profits.

Many of them gave us several years before the next depression. But after seeing what the old gang did to price control, and noting press predictions of Republican victories, most of them now place the depression in 1947, any time from spring on.

★ ★ ★

SOME OF the Republican candidates say they won't let us starve in their next depression, like they did in their last.

But don't count on this too much.

For the old gang has a long record of fighting social security and anything else that would relieve the plight of the unemployed.

In the last Congress, the GOP-polltax Democrat majority fought and blocked every kind of social welfare legislation, whether for housing, health, social security, minimum wages or full employment.

Put them back in again with increased power, and they'll put us out again on the breadline.

★ ★ ★

WHILE THE big business press is counting its chickens before they are hatched, the wise-money boys are not.

Wall Street reports indicate that, whereas a rising stock market is expected to follow a Republican victory in November, this prospect is not being "discounted in advance."

In other words, the speculators are not so sure of a tory sweep as to bet any big money on it yet.

★ ★ ★

BIG BUSINESS sees a joker in all its press predictions. And that joker is you, brother and sister unionists.

It can't count on you being so careless of your future as to fail to vote and to get others to vote.

If you really organize and work to get out a record labor and progressive vote, you can clean out the old gang.

You can scrap its whole program of high prices, low wages, inflation and depression by electing a progressive Congress.

FASCIST SMITH BACKS TOP GOP CANDIDATES

HAMMERING away at the endorsement of top Repubican candidates by Gerald L. K. Smith and his America First gang, Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, this week called for a deluge of votes in November to prevent the America First pro-Nazi philosophy from dominating the Congress.

The list of America First Party endorsements is printed below so that voters in each state will recognize the candidates backed by Gerad L. K. Smith. (Endorsements in southern states where there is no real contest now that the primaries are over are omitted).

Congress of Industrial Organizations

TO EVERY MEMBER OF THE CIO:

This is a message of great urgency for every CIO member. We write you on the eve of the 1946 Congressional election, an election which will decide America's course and the fate of every American and his family. The fact is that if the American people are not to be thrust back again to depression, if we are to avoid another horrible war, if our unions are to survive, a progressive 80th Congress must be elected on November 5th.

Our opponents in this campaign, the reactionaries in both the Republican and Democratic Parties, have sought to scare the American people by a smoke screen of confusion. Although they bear responsibility for whatever confusion and shortages now exist by their butchering of OPA, housing and other vital legislation in the 79th Congress, they seek to place the blame elsewhere. This is not a new story. They have used it in past elections, unsuccessfully. The people examined the charge, rejected it and then carried the fight to the enemy.

The people, the voters, will do it again on November 5th. Our weapon is the ballot. We must use it. We have seen in the past few weeks the mobilization of those forces that were Franklin D. Roosevelt's staunchest supporters. We have taken our message, the fulfillment of the Roosevelt program, peace and prosperity, to the American people. They have accepted it.

We need to implement that acceptance at the ballot box. The only way reaction will be swept aside, will be by a huge outpouring of votes. The responsibility is that of every decent American, of every decent union member to go to the polls on November 5th and vote. And to help in getting his family, neighbors and friends to also vote.

Remember, voting is the answer to our problems. Voting is the way to a better Congress.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Philip Murray — Jack Kroll

President, CIO — Director, CIO-PAC

Gov. Thomas Dewey gave a reluctant and fruitless audience to 75 ex-servicemen who last week-end asked him to call a special session of the N. Y. legislature to relieve the critical lack of veterans' housing. After the veterans waited overnight in the Senate chamber, Dewey deigned to see them. One of the ex-GIs' leaders, William Rebens, is here presenting the Governor with their housing program.

DEWEY SAYS NO ON VETS' HOUSING

By S. CLINTON STERN

President, N. Y. Veterans' Senate

I was one of 75 ex-GIs who went to see Gov. Thomas Dewey about getting some veterans' housing. On Saturday afternoon, October 19, we peacefully walked into the New York State Capital building in Albany and organized ourselves into a Veterans' Senate.

Governor Dewey had been notified long in advance that thousands of people were coming to see him, but he refused to meet with this large delegation. (Ed. Note: The Greater N. Y. CIO Council at the same time sponsored a demonstration by teachers and state employes seeking salary increases, but they did not participate in the Veterans' Senate.)

We spoke in the name of millions of veterans who are suffering from the housing shortage. After our entry the state police surrounded the Capitol and clamped a tight food embargo on the building.

After setting up a committee and electing officers we began a debate on veterans housing. Saturday night, after hours of debate we unanimously agreed on a series of demands. These demands were submitted to the Governor's secretary who rejected them and refused to let us see the Governor. We stayed there all night.

When Dewey finally consented to see us Sunday our spokesmen presented him with our program. The Governor refused to call a special emergency session on housing, said he had done all he could and blamed the housing shortage on the New Deal and the Administration. We feel these charges were unjustified and were purely political since the Administration-sponsored housing program had been killed by opposition in Congress.

New Vote Record

A permanent voting record, printed on heavy paper and listing the action of Senators and Congressmen on 32 issues during both sessions of the 79th Congress, has just been issued by the CIO Legislative and Education & Research Depts.

In the section on the Senate it lists 18 votes from the first session of the 79th Congress, ranging from the consideration of Henry Wallace's appointment as secretary of commerce to the May-Bailey Manpower Bill. Issues recorded for the second session include the Hobbs Amendment to the Case Bill, the final passage of the Case Bill, two votes on the Truman anti-union bill, two votes on the Patman housing bill, the cloture rule on FEPC, the 65c Minimum Wage, the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Bill, the McFarland Amendment to the British Loan and four amendments to the price control bill.

The record of the House votes includes such issues as the May-Bailey manpower bill; the May-Arends, Hobbs and Case anti-union proposals; the Dirksen amendment to the USES bill; the school lunch bill; the Patman housing bill, the Elliott Rider to the NLRB appropriaion, 7 amendments to the price control bill, and the atomic energy bill.

IN introduction to the record, Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, writes:

"Here in the U. S. the right of most people to vote has been held as commonplace for so long that comparatively few seem to recognize its importance. America is in no danger at the moment of losing its liberties to a foreign power.

"Yet we are in grave danger of losing our liberties through reactionary and other undemocratic internal pressures, popular indifference toward elections, and through our failure to realize that the more people go to the polls and the greater the interest they display in the outcome—even in off-year elections—the more alert our elective officers will be and the better our government."

No Outside Influence

BRASSHAT SMEAR HIT AS COVERUP

CHARGING that GOP brasshats are attemping to ride into power on false issues and smear campaigns, CIO Political Action Director Jack Kroll this week rejected "any foreign influence or interference in our domestic election contests."

Kroll called for a large vote as a basis for fighting the Republican leadership which is trying to "avoid the responsibility for depressing the living standards of the American people, of cutting deep into their pay envelopes by forcing prices upwards and instituting a drive to lift all rent controls."

He charged that the GOP is seeking to ride to victory on false issues, knowing that it has no real program to offer to the American people.

The full text of Kroll's statement follows:

"ON OCT. 21 the American press reported an English language broadcast on the Moscow radio presuming to commend candidates for the United States Congress supported by the CIO-PAC.

"While the world press and radio are free to commend all elected candidates in all countries as has been the practice for generations, the CIO-PAC regards as completely unwarranted and thoroughly disavows any foreign influence or interference in our domestic election contests I cannot state this too emphatically on behalf of our committee.

"We repudiate and reject all efforts by our political enemies to tar us with an alien brush.

"THE leadership of the Republican Party, knowing that they have no real program to offer the American people, are seeking to ride to victory on false issues. Their efforts to confuse American voters will not succeed. The American people still remember the shocking statement of Sen. Robert Taft protesting the just verdicts at Nuremberg.

"The American people remember the recent endorsement of John Bricker by Gerald L. K. Smith and the failure of Bricker to repudiate the support of Smith's rabble-rousing crowd.

"The Republican Party, by its attempts to smear the PAC, is trying to avoid the responsibility which is its for depressing the living standards of the American people, of cutting deep into their pay envelopes by forcing prices upwards and instituting a drive to lift all rent controls.

"OUR Republican friends are frightened. Newspaper editorials and polls are not sufficient to hide their vicious record of obstruction in the last Congress. And now the results of their handiwork, Republican prices, soaring prices, are coming home to roost.

"The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards echoing the Republican line—has loudly demanded an immediate 15% rent increase. They want Republican rents as well as Republican prices.

"No matter how hard the Republican Party brass hats led by Dewey and Taft seeks to fool the people with the cry of Communism, Confusion and Chaos—those three false campaign bugaboos —it cannot hide its own obstructionist record, it cannot hide the boom and bust philosophy it promotes, it will not prevent millions of Americans from going to the polls on November 5th to vote for progressive candidates who will work for the enactment of the Roosevelt program.

"The record of CIO-PAC since its inception in July 1943 has been absolutely clear. It is an official Committee of the CIO representing over six million American workers with their families. CIO and CIO-PAC are the voice of over 14 million Americans, loyal to America and American institutions. Both in war and in peace this has been amply demonstrated beyond a doubt."

My, My, Look Who's Under Whose Bed!

The Republicans who are today yelling "Communist!" as a smokescreen should remember that in their early days they were red-baited.

From J. G. Randall's book, Lincoln the President, comes the following commentary, which quotes the N. Y. Herald of Sept. 19, 1860:

"The dread word 'socialism' was hurled into the arena of words as devasting characterization of Republican policy. 'Socialism in its worst form', it was said 'including . . . women's rights, the division of land, free love, and the exaltation of the desires of the individual over the . . . family, and the forced equality of all men in phalansteries . . . are a part of the logical chain of ideas that flow from . . . the soul of black republicanism'."

Washington—Kept City

KLANSMAN 'MAYOR' OF NATION'S CAPITAL

By FRED d'AVILA

IT was August 9, 1946. The American people, who had just helped win a bloody war to crush fascism, heard a scratchy, nasal whine over a national radio hookup, declaring that, "I am a member of the Ku Klux Klan No. 40, called the Bilbo Klan No. 40, of Mississippi."

Theodore Gilmore Bilbo, 69-year-old thrice-elected Senator from Mississippi, was brazen but not rash. Admission of membership in the rope, terror and bedsheet club was part of his race-baiting strategy that has made him a successful politician in his polltax "paradise."

But—and it concerns the whole nation—the flat-headed hate-monger is also "mayor" of the United States Capital. As ranking member of the District Committee because of his Senate seniority, Bilbo calls the shots for a city of nearly a million people.

That city for more than 70 years had the right to elect its own government. Congress, riding a wave of reaction following the Civil War, took away that right in 1878.

This November 5, while the rest of the nation is exercising its democratic right to choose national and local representatives, Washington will stage a mock election, designed to register the protest of its residents against a Bilbo government.

WASHINGTON residents are concerned about many problems. They cannot vote for the President of the U. S. They pay taxes but they have no voice in levying them. They are saddled with a cumbersome municipal government that in the final analysis consists of a "city council" composed of 435 Representatives and 96 Senators. And—high on the list of grievances—they have Bilbo as "Mayor."

Who is this "mayor" elected by a polltax minority in a state more than a thousand miles away from the people he governs? Does he perform his sworn duty to uphold the Constitution, which among other provisions, says that "the right of the citizens of the U. S. to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the U. S. or by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude"? Let's look at the record.

It is July 2, 1946. A steaming, gaping audience, ridden with all the race prejudices common in Mississippi, breaks into cheers. Their man has spoken.

"I call upon every red-blooded Anglo-Saxon in Mississippi to resort to any means to keep Negroes from the polls. If you don't know what this means, you are just not up on your persuasive measures."

The speaker was Bilbo.

While thousands of Dombrowskis and Johnsons, Cohens and Kellys, Massettis and Hansens were giving their lives for victory, Bilbo contributed to national unity by referring to millions of Italian citizens as "dagoes," by reviling Jews as "kikes," and by calling Negroes "niggers."

In 1929, a Mississippi lynch mob burned a Negro at the stake. There was a widespread demand that the murderers be brought to justice. Bilbo, then governor and presumably a member of the KKK, declared that he had "neither time nor the money" to conduct an investigation.

This is the first of two articles on the right to vote in the District of Columbia, amplifying a CIO Convention resolution calling for D. C. suffrage and pointing out that "free and democratic elections . . . are the greatest guarantee for the preservation of democracy and our basic freedoms."

BILBO'S Senate record rivals his words. On issues of interest to the people, listed in The CIO NEWS voting supplement, his score is seven zeros and five minuses. He voted against housing, against fair employment, against a 65c minimum wage, against price control and against polltax repeal.

On May 10, 1946, he raved against the "vicious, inequitable, unfair, unrighteous, almost criminal social security and old age pension law."

BILBO'S viciousness has been equalled by his political durability. He survived a clouded scandal as supervisor of a girl's school to win election in 1908 as a state senator. At a grand jury hearing, he admitted taking a bribe to swing an election, but claimed he had accepted it to expose the bribe givers. He avoided expulsion from the state senate by just one vote, after the senate had passed a resolution asking him to resign and declaring him "unfit to sit with honest, upright men in a respectable legislative body. . ."

He was twice elected governor. In 1934 he was elected to the U. S. Senate, and has sat there ever since.

Campaigns to unseat him have been started by the Civil Rights Congress in N. Y. City and by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare in Washington. Both groups are circulating petitions. That of the Southern Conference says:

"If we must be ruled as a colony with taxation without representation, we implore our rulers to assign to the committee (Senate District Committee) only senators who believe in democracy, the Constitution and the equal rights of all citizens."

THE Washington problem, however, is more than Bilbo. And it is acute enough so that nearly 300 civic organizations, from the CIO Council to the Board of Trade, have come out unequivocally for:

1. The Capper-Summers bill providing for a constitutional amendment empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and the right to vote for President and Vice-President of the U. S.

2. The McCarran bill, providing for an elected council-manager plan for home rule in District government.

There's good precedent for the abolition of supervision by three commissioners appointed by the President. From 1802 to 1871 Washington had a mayor and council type of government elected by the people. And from 1871 to 1878 the capital had a territorial form of government, with residents electing members of one branch of a two-branch legislature. In 1878, Congress became Washington's "city council" with the President appointing the commissioners to supervise the job. Washington is a "kept city."

SEN. THEO. G. BILBO, "MAYOR" OF WASHINGTON

"I am a member of the Ku Klux Klan No. 40, called the Bilbo Klan No. 40, of Mississippi"

Under the present government, cumbersome and unresponsive to the people, the administration of schools, jails, hospitals and other public institutions has resulted in scandal after scandal. Wretched slums sprawl unhealthily among million-dollar government buildings. Negroes are segragated from whites, not only in residence, but in schools and on playgrounds.

Congressmen, busy with affairs important to their own constituents, are not inclined to work on District problems. As "city council," Congress literally has to pass on items as unimportant as the naming of streets and the location of sewers. Those Congressmen who are sincerely interested in the District must take time that belongs to the nation and to the people that elected them to deal with a host of petty problems that a home rule government could handle much more efficiently.

NATIONALLY, most Washington residents are just as impotent as they are locally. Only one in three has legal voting residence elsewhere—and more than half of these would prefer to vote in the District, according to an opinion poll by the Washington Post.

Thousands of them can't vote even by absentee ballot, because more than one-fourth the states deny the right either to register, or to vote in the primaries or general elections, by mail.

Washington, with nearly a million residents, has more population than any one of 14 states. Yet these states have a total of 53 Representatives and Senators in Congress! Washington has none.

D. C. residents eight years ago rolled up a 7-1 majority in favor of home rule and a 12-1 majority for national representation.

In the referendum scheduled for November 5, it is expected that majorities will be even more overwhelming. After all, no self-respecting capital could long tolerate a Bilbo as "mayor."

Hovels like this Negro woman's home are in brutal contrast to the gleaming marble of Washington's government buildings. A 1940 survey revealed that 40% of the Negro population and 12% of the white lived in dwellings either in need of major structural repairs or without inside water supply or toilet facilities, or having two or all of these deficiencies.

TO WIN OUR ECONOM

This is the program of Franklin Roosevelt. It is also the program of the CIO.

It is vital that the Eightieth Congress take action for security, for full employment, for health, for decent living standards.

Reaction, spearheaded by GOP Tories, is dead opposed to this program.

You can help win FDR's program for the American people on November 5—Vote!

Vote for CIO-PAC-endorsed candidates for Federal and State offices.

Vote for a better America!

Third CMU Victory

MARINE ENGINEERS WIN

FOR the third time in five months unity among maritime unions paid off this week when the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. won a victory by winning a contract with the East and Gulf Coast ship owners yielding to the union's demands.

The ship owners who forced the MEBA to strike for 21 days finally signed an agreement which gave preferential hiring for union members, maintenance of membership and 15% general wage increase.

The contract also boosted the pay for overtime work from $1.20 to $1.60 an hour, and jumped the night relief rates from $1.15 to $1.60 an hour.

MEBA immediately submitted the proposals to its members for ratification, but was withholding the results until the U. S. Maritime Commission, which owns a good portion of the merchant vessels, issues a directive.

The directive was delayed because the AFL Master, Mates and Pilots who struck with the MEBA had not settled their differences with the operators, although they were expected to do so shortly as the CIO NEWS went to press.

CMU co-chairmen Joseph Curran and Harry Bridges and General CIO Counsel Lee Pressman participated in the final discussions between the ship owners and the MEBA. The CMU—Committee for Maritime Unity—includes seven unions, six of them CIO and one unaffiliated.

This was the third time that the CMU whose members respected the MEBA and the MMP picket lines and participated in demonstrations proved the value of maritime unions' unity.

In June the CMU unions obtained in negotiations with the ship owners and the Maritime Commission $17.50 monthly increases, a reduction of working hours, and increased payments for overtime work for all unlicensed personnel.

In September the CMU again demonstrated the value of maritime unity when a strike was called to obtain wage equity with the AFL seamen who had been granted a greater increase than CIO unlicensed personnel had obtained.

For the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. this donkey used in a demonstration this week in front of the American Merchant Marine Institute characterized the adamant stand of the ship owners. Following the mass picketing, the East and Gulf Coast operators decided to get down to brass tacks and gave the MEBA what it wanted. Eight thousand members of unions of the CIO Committee for Maritime Unity took part in the demonstration.

PAY US ENOUGH TO LIVE—UAW

THE CIO Auto Workers will demand susbstantial wage increases from all employers whose union contracts have wage reopening clauses, the UAW executive board voted at its Cleveland meeting this week.

The board did not name a specific figure it would demand but said in a wage policy agreement:

"It is the intention of the union to make every effort across the bargaining table with management to arrive at an agreement on a wage increase adequate to meet the needs of the workers and the nation.

"The unholy alliance between big business and its political henchmen in Congress has finally achieved its purpose in the complete destruction of effective control of the cost of living. Under these circumstances we have but one clear course—to demand a wage increase that will provide the workers and their families with a decent standard of living."

The board also called for immediate steps by the government to stop hoarding and speculation in scarce materials and, if necessary, operate idle plants to break bottlenecks and relieve shortages so that industry will operate on production schedules that assure full employment and a full workweek.

The union statement emphasized that "even at the present low level of production" substantial wage increases can be paid without any increase in the prices of cars or replacement parts.

The board cited cost of living figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics to support its wage increase demand.

"Total increase in the cost of living from Jan., 1941, to Sept., 1946, has been 50%," the statement said. "An 18½% wage increase paid to most workers in our industry early in 1946 brought hourly wage rates fairly close to the cost of living increase that had occurred up to Jan., 1946, but left workers' take-home pay far below wartime levels. However, the wrecking of price controls by Congress has again left wage rates far behind living costs, and the disparity existing is greater than at any time since 1941.

"Already the cost of living, as measured by the government index, is 12½% higher than in Jan., 1946 . . . . Authoritative sources predict that by December of this year the cost of living will have risen 20 to 25% or more above last January. Any forecast at this time is necessarily tentative and will be subject to revision as negotiations proceed."

ASK 25c AN HOUR MORE

IT'S two bits more for the CIO Oil Workers.

That was the hourly wage increase which the Oil Workers Intl. Union policy committee voted this week to place before industry in immediate negotiations.

Meeting in Galveston, Texas, the 24-man policy committee created by the union's convention authorized local unions to begin negotiations Nov. 1 for the $2 a day increase. Wage conference with oil companies will also be arranged on the district basis and the major companies will be asked to meet the union on the national level.

The committee pointed out that the Oil Workers made possible full production in the industry at the time when certain segments of management were throttling production as in the meat industry.

Sabotage of full production was labelled as conspiracy of the management of certain industries and reactionary leaders in Congress to throttle price control and attack the living the standards of American workers. The committee declared that as a result the real wages of oil workers have declined $8.44 a week in recent months.

Oil industry profits, the committee pointed out, stand at the all-time high, 172% above the prewar period, while prices are 44% above the same period and hourly earnings have increased only 31%.

"We regard the 25-cent an hour increase as a modest effort to achieve balance between the Oil Workers' income and skyrocketing prices," OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight said.

NON-STOP ORGANIZER

Sam Nadelman, international representative of the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers, "may at times be out but he is never down," reports Virginia CIO Director Ernest B, Pugh.

Nadelman, while organizing the J. P. Taylor Tobacco Co. workers at South Boston, Va., was stricken with appendicitis and hospitalized at Danville.

"Before leaving the hospital he organized all the orderlies and attendants and turned the applications over to a representative of the CIO Public Workers, which has set up a local union," Pugh reported.

Incidentally, the Taylor Tobacco election was won by the CIO, 385 to 10.

HAWAII TALKS RESUMED

The CIO Longshoremen who represent 25,000 Hawaii sugar workers on strike since Sept. 1 were scheduled to resume negotiations with the plantation owners as the CIO NEWS went to press.

Management had sabotaged negotiations, but were forced to resume discussions after Federal Conciliator Stanley V. White had charged, in a letter to the Hawaii Employers Council, that failure to resume negotiations would indicate that the sugar industry's goal was "extermination of unionism on the island."

Warns Texas CIO Of:

PLOT TO KILL UNIONS

Plans for combatting the plot of Texas business interests to liquidate the labor movement, stepping up the organizing campaign and enacting state legislation favorable to labor were made by the Texas State Industrial Union Council at its tenth annual convention at Austin last weekend.

Executive Sec. Morris Akin of the Texas Council urged greater contributions to PAC in future campaigns as he revealed that only about $3500 had been collected in comparison with the $3,400,000 raised by the Texas Manufactuing Assn. which he said will be used to buy anti-union legislation.

The convention adopted a state legislative program which called for a more secret ballot, abolition of the polltax, aiding bona fide veterans organizations in passing legislation beneficial to ex-GIs and expansion of legislative informational service for CIO locals.

The delegates also urged reelection of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, support of the Texas Council of the Brewery Workers whose industry is under attack from prohibitionists and ending the $200 monthly ceiling on salaries of veterans taking on-the-job training.

Encouraging results were reported by Robert Oliver, state director of the CIO Organizing Committee, who said that 36 plants with 7,500 workers had been organized in Texas since the campaign opened in mid-May and that only four NLRB elections had been lost.

He said that his staff of 17 organizers would get to 200 plants where organization has been requested as fast as possible.

Natl. CIO-IUC director John Brophy said that the first battle against inflation had been lost and urged that labor demand that the President call a national conference representing labor, management and agriculture to discuss the relation of wages to prices.

Brophy declared that the CIO wants "contructive economic collaboration among the nations, universal disarmament, and the extension of democratic political and economic institutions."

James E. Ward, Steelworker, and L. J. Forman were elected president and vice-president of the council respectively, and Akin was re-elected executive secretary.

ANTI-BIAS PACT

For the second time in a year the CIO Transport Service Employes has signed a contract giving Negro and white railroad station employes in the deep South equal protection and equal opportunity for advancement.

LEAVE OPEN WAGE DEMANDS

A special meeting of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers' Natl. Harvester Council, held at Chicago this week, established the union's new wage demands for Intl. Harvester workers.

The union will immediately reopen wage negotiations on a national scale for its 30,000 Harvester members in ten production plants throughout the nation.

Gerald Fielde, director of the Harvester Council and FE Secretary-Treasurer, announced the following six point wage policy. The union's present contracts with IHC, negotiated after an 80-day strike last spring, contain wage reopening clauses. The six demands include:

Special additional increases to skilled workers, including tool and die, and allied day-rated workers, maintenance and others.

Guaranteed annual wages, assuring a minimum of 40 hours pay for each of 52 weeks per annum.

TO PUT IT BRIEFLY

Charged with resisting police who attacked a picketline during the recent Piedmont Leaf Co. strike here, a CIO organizer and two Negroes were sentenced to terms on the chain gang.

The organizer, Phil Koritz, intl. representative of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers was sentenced for one year, while the other two defendants, Cal Robertson Jones and Margaret Degraffenreid, were sent up for 10 and eight months, respectively. A fourth defendant was found innocent.

An appeal will be made challenging the North Carolina law which prohibits jury service to non-owners of property and pointing out that Negores are systematically excluded from jury servcice.

At a general executive board meeting here Oct. 14-15, the CIO Shoe Workers set Dec. 1 as deadline for nominations for the vacant union presidency to be submitted to the board.

The board will have a special meeting in mid-December to elect a president from among the nominees. In the meantime, the union will be run by Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell and three vice presidents.

CIO Vice-Pres. and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood will sit with the executive board until the election in an advisory capacity, the group decided unanimously. Former Pres. Frank McGrath was ousted by the union executive board early in October for failure to carry out his duties, after which McGrath sent in his resignation.

Canadian CIO Wins

$55 MILLION IN PAY GAINS

By L. J. ROGERS

CANADA'S counterpart of CIO, the Canadian Congress of Labor, is currently winding up its first national wage drive with what is conceded to be the greatest victory ever scored by organized labor in the dominion.

Launched in April in face of united opposition from the Dominion Government and Canadian business, Canada's wage drive fought to victory through a bitterly contested six-month long battle during which 100,000 CIO members were on the picket lines at various times in virtually every major Canadian industry.

Strikers won increases averaging 15c an hour in such industries as lumber, metal mining, steel, automobile, chemical, rubber, electrical, machinery and brass after strikes ranging from six weeks to 22 weeks in length marked by company and government strike-breaking attempts in most cases.

The balloon bearing the word "steak" is the highest of all in this demonstration by the CIO Office & Professional Workers at the Bankers Trust Co., N. Y. City, to show the need for wage increases adequate to meet soaring living costs.

Unlike 18½c pattern won in CIO's U. S. drive, Canadian strikes were settled at various levels ranging from 16.1c gained by the rubber workers down to 12c accepted by the UAW Chrysler strikers. First big victory was scored by CIO Woodworkers in British Columbia who won 15c increases for 37,000 west coast loggers after five-week strike ending late in June.

When eastern industry backed by Dominion Government refused to grant similar increases, 15,000 Steelworkers in Canada's three basic steel plants pulled out in early July followed shortly by 25,000 auto, electric and rubber-workers. After three months on picket lines Steelworkers won 13½c which will amount to approximately 15c when negotiations are completed.

Other eastern strikes followed steel settlement pattern—built around 13c increases with "fringe" clauses worth up to 3c an hour more in such strikes as rubber.

While final gains of the Canadian wage drive were below original aims of 20-25c an hour plus the 40-hour week (an objective largely abandoned), union leaders are well satisfied with final outcome.

Besides establishing CCL as Canada's top labor organization and handing big business its first big licking, the wage drive triumph means pay check boosts for all CCL unions this year without need for further strike action.

Since April 185,000 CCL members have received annual wage gains totalling $55 million—and further settlements before the year end made possible by the wage drive victory will bring the grand total to some $90 million in annual wage gains for some 300,000 CCL members.

The 15c gain pattern compares well with the U. S. 18c pattern when it is considered that Canada's price control system has held cost of living down to a 25% rise since 1939 compared with a 45% U. S. rise. The price decontrol process which produced a six-point rise in Canadian index in 1946 seems to have been almost stopped with the index for September actually showing a fractional decrease.

SUE FOR $6 MILLION A WEEK

The steel companies are fleecing the 800,000 members of the Steelworkers weekly out of approximately six million dollars due them under the Wage-Hour Law.

The Steelworkers will seek to establish this through a suit brought this week in the U. S. Court for the Southern district of West Virginia against the Intl. Nickel Co., Huntington.

The union is bringing suit to recover portal-to-portal pay, which was found collectable for factory workers by the U. S. Supreme Court in its decision against the Mt. Clemens Pottery Co., Mt. Clemens, Mich., in June, this year. The action was started in that case by the CIO United Pottery Workers

CIO Pres. Philip Murray recently announced that the Steelworkers, which he also heads, would seek to collect portal-to-portal pay.

Steelworkers are paid now for the time they are actually on the job, management disregarding the time that elapses from when they go into the gate until they actually are at work, the CIO Legal Dept. points out. That plus the time the workers must spend in the plant from leaving their tasks until passing the gate on the way home is estimated at about 30 minutes.

Going to work Steelworkers must change clothes, collect tools, put on safety devices and punch a time clock before taking up their tasks. The process is reversed when they leave the plant.

The Steelworkers contend that under the Wage-hour Law and the Supreme Court decision they are entitled to time and a half for these two periods and estimate that they would be entitled to about $7.40 per week per worker.

OIL WORKERS RENAME KNIGHT

O. A. Knight was reelected to his seventh term as president of the Oil Workers in the referendum just concluded. A. R. Kinstley was reelected to his sixth term as vice president. Both first assumed office in 1940. T. M. McCormick was elected secretary-treasurer.

Elected to the executive council were Courtland P. Myers, Long Beach, Calif.; W. A. Urban, Parco, Wyo.; Forrest Tillman, Wichita Falls, Tex.; L. L. Crane, Port Neches, Tex., W. W. Watson of Kansas City, Kansas; George Carlson of Hammond, Ind., and Leo F. Brady of Carteret, N. J., Local 397.

WORKERS TO GET 11% OF PROFITS

The Natl. Pressure Cooker Co., Eau Claire, Wis., has just signed a contract guaranteeing each of the 1000 CIO Steelworkers employed at the plant 5% of the firm's total earnings.

For the current year, however, the bonus will amount to 11%.

Another unusual clause deals with sick and death benefits, hospitalization and pensions. The death benefit amounts to $1,000. The sick benefit is $15 a week plus 30 days' hospitalization, $20 for penicillin and $20 for X-ray or other laboratory charges.

Other features are maintenance of membership, dues checkoff, shift differentials, a 7c hourly increase and paid vacations.

Sprucing Up

BEFORE YOU BUY A WINTER COAT

By HANNA SHERMAN

ARE you planning to buy a winter coat this season? My candid advice would be to ask yourself seriously, "Do I really need one this year or not?" The coat you have now can often be adapated to the present season's fashion and very easily too. This will give you as much of a psychological lift as buying a new one!

This is the first of a series of articles written exclusively for The CIO News by a woman who has taught literally thousands of women how to dress. At present she is an instructor at N. Y. University, where she teaches a course for women on Personality Development.

Leave us face it. This year you will pay too much for your coat. And the fabric and workmanship may leave plenty to be desired. You can make last winter's coat do and make yourself look prettier as well.

Here's how. Remove that old fur collar. Take it to your milliner. Have her use it for a brimmed hat trimmed with the fur. Be sure she leaves enough to band a pair of good looking hand stitched gloves, matching in color, of course. Finish the collar neatly.

Give that princess-line coat a 1947 look with a stunning leather belt. Wear with shoes of matching leather, maybe a jaunty over-the-shoulder bag. The slimmer your waistline and the taller you are, the wider that belt and the larger that bag can be!

You Navy girls and Wacs converting back to a civilian winter can have the tailor do a beautiful dye job on your service coats. (Navy girls, you can leave them blue!) Change the buttons, again add a bright scarf and wear the prettiest hat you can find. Cost? A few shekels.

Remember one luxurious fur accent is often enough to make a costume. Fur muffs, hats, scarfs, belts, all give a touch of wonderful elegance to a simple coat. Best of all they can be worn these lazy fall days with your suits and dresses.

IF YOU have looked closely into your conscience and find that you cannot live without a new winter coat, here are some suggestions that you might remember while shopping.

First, the style. Many of the new season's styles have been designed for the tall slim girl. It's probably the result of the fashion influence from Paris, where the girls are very thin and for a very good reason. If you are under five feet four and inclined to be at all overweight, beware of the coats with too much bulk, too much fullness and those wide belts. They're not for you.

One of the new features in the coats being shown this season is the wide arm hole and fairly loose fit. This is wonderful over suits, which have become practically a twelve month standby in our wardrobes.

Here again you short girls with a figure problem—don't wear a coat over a suit as a regular costume. It's warm and comfortable, but it adds pounds to your appearance. For you, the fitted coat and the tuxedo type coat with flat instead of fluffy fur trim are best. Again I advise—wear these with a dress (woolen if you like) instead of a suit.

COLORS to choose this year are not necessarily the old black and brown standbys. There are interesting new dark greens and new coppery tones. And be sure to look for navy blue. It has stepped out of the strictly Spring picture and is now being shown the year round. It's new, fresh looking and still one of the most flattering colors a woman can wear.

Brown is becoming to most women and is back in the fashion picture. This year a beautiful new brown is being shown that is stunning with black and other colors. But don't overlook black if it flatters you.

The quickest way to achieve a well-put-together look this winter is to have your hat, coat, bag, shoes and gloves all in a matching color. And remember, one bright accent!

No matter when you buy, in figuring the cost of your winter coat, remember that although it's a big dent in your budget now, it should be good for three winters of wear. (Divide the cost by three.) Remember too, that most lavishly fur trimmed coats are subject to Federal tax.

Y. City.

New NCPAC Manual Issued

The famous "PAC techniques" of building a political organization and conducting a political campaign are explained in detail in a 9 by 12 in. illustrated Manual of Practical Political Action published this week by the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee.

The 200-page loose-leaf which applies for the first time a "scientific" approach to professional politics, contains articles on subjects ranging from building a register-and-vote campaign to campaigning for a congressman.

The book is co-edited by Lewis C. Frank, Jr., and Ralph E. Shikes and is written by political specialists who were on the faculty of the NCPAC's School of Political Action Techniques in Washington.

The manual "is designed to help make democracy work," state the editors. "It is intended for the use of the 'political conscious' American who would encourage similar consciousness in his fellow citizens."

Price of the manual, sold at cost, is $3. At no additional cost a series of six supplements for insertion as new political techniques are developed throughout the country will be sent to those ordering the manual, which may be obtained from the NCPAC, 205 E. 42nd St., New York 17, N. Y.

Three CIO officials have been appointed to the newly-created national labor committee of the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Representing CIO are Pres. Willard Townsend, Transport Service Employees; Pres. Walter Reuther, Auto Workers, and Sec. George Weaver, CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

Anger's Not Enough

IT'S A BIG VOTE THAT COUNTS

LOADS of Americans are pretty sore today. They're sore about the rising cost of living; about the difficulty of finding a place to live; about the new crop of millionaires produced by the war; about discrimination against Negroes, Jews and the foreign-born; about the threat of another war.

These and other injustices have badly undermined their sense of security. They want to know who's to blame and what can be done about it.

And that's just what the CIO Political Action Committee's new pamphlet-of-the-month by Joseph Gaer, "Remember in November," tells them.

The 79th Congress, elected to serve the people, failed us, it states. If the 80th Congress about to be elected is to do better, American voters must turn out in record numbers and help elect good Congressmen.

"It is up to us, the voters, to re-elect those Congressmen who tried hard to help the people; and to defeat those who bowed to the profiteers and the realestate boards and the NAM lobbyists and did everything in their power to Taft-up, to Bilbo-up, to Rankin-up every piece of good legislation that came up before Congress."

● The difference between a small vote and a big vote is the difference between a bad Congress and a good Congress.

● "Many close elections have been won by the election district workers bringing in four, five, six or more additional votes to the polls during the closing hours," states a former Chairman of the Natl. Democratic Committee.

● The best PAC work can be done in your union, in your place of work and in your neighborhood. The pamphlet gives detailed suggestions how to go about the job in these three ways: How to take care of such things as distribution of printed or mimeographed lists of candidates; checkup of eligible voters in plants; arrangements for pooling cars for transportation to take sick, old and disabled voters to the polls are some of the suggestions made.

Meetings to plan the necessary work and report results.

Distribution of literature in both shops and neighborhoods.

Use of both free and paid-for time on the radio, as outlined in the CIO-PAC's "1946 Radio Handbook."

Use of sound trucks on Election Day, with both speakers and the PAC's album of Songs for Action available.

The albums, which may be obtained from the PAC at $4 a set, include the following songs: A Dollar for Pac; No-No-Discrimination; Talking PAC; Congressmen, Mr. Congressman; The Union Gang; Round and My Congressman; A Dollar Ain't a Dollar Any More; and others.

Also listed are CIO-PAC pamphlets and leaflets available for distribution.

Altogether, "Remember in November" is an invaluable political action aid for CIO and PAC groups and members. It and other CIO-PAC material may be ordered from the CIO Political Action Committee, 205 E. 42nd St., N. Y. 17, N. Y.

Education NOTES

Eby To Attend UNESCO Meet

CIO Education & Research Director Kermit Eby will represent the CIO as a member of the UNESCO American Commission at the first meeting of the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization which will be held in Paris in November. He will leave Paris after the CIO Convention, to be held in Atlantic City the week of Nov. 18.

Eby, who has been elected as a member of the American Commission's executive board, will act as a technical consultant for the American delegation of 10.

SVEND GODFREDSEN, editor and educational director for the CIO United Packinghouse Workers, has accepted an appointment as a member of the board of directors of Roosevelt College, announces Edwin R. Embree, board chairman.

The board of this liberal college, noted for its policy of no racial discrimination, is considered unusual for the reason that one-third of it is composed of faculty members, in addition to representatives of labor, management, the judiciary, press, education and cooperatives.

Four institutes on Labor and Politics are being held this month at Roosevelt sponsored by the College's Division of Labor Education and Dept. of Economics in cooperation with the American Labor Education Service.

Last of the series, to be held Oct. 31, is on the subject of "International Issues for Labor in 1946." Pres. Willard S. Townsend, CIO Transport Service Employes, will be chairman.

A SCHOLARSHIP fund in honor of two young CIO leaders killed in World War II, Bill Lamson and Jack McElhone, has been set up at Wayne University, Detroit. The fund will be used each year for ten years to assist a Wayne student who shows promise of making contribution toward the ideals for which the two CIO men died.

TWO ATTRACTIVE leaflets, "Is Milk Beyond the Reach of Your Child?" and "Jim Crow Schools for Ohio?" are being distributed by the thousands by the Ohio CIO-PAC, 218 E. State St., Columbus 15, Ohio. Each carries a vital message to help stir interest in the November elections.

MRS. ERNEST CALLOWAY, wife of the education director of the CIO United Transport Service Employes, died Oct. 5, in Cook County hospital, Chicago, after a long illness. Shortly after her marriage in 1942, Mrs. Calloway conducted a woman's page for "Bags and Baggage," UTSEA official organ, but was forced to retire later that year because of ill health.

A SERIES of weekly radio programs over station WBT, Charlotte, N. C., is being presented Saturdays, from 5:15-5:30 p.m., by the CIO Organizing Committee. Exec. Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi of the Textile Workers Union spoke on the significance of the CIO's southern drive at the first broadcast.

THE IMPORTANCE of the ballot box in winning needed legislation and defeating dangerous bills is the subject of discussion on a series of eight broadcasts being sponsored by the CIO Textile Workers Union in Lawrence, Mass.

HUMAN INTEREST STORIES FROM THE LABOR PRESS

A CERTAIN factory was owned by three men of very different religious faiths. One was Catholic, another Portestant and the third a Jew.

One day three workers in this factory were eating their lunches together in the factory yard. Before long they were involved in a heated argument on religion. Just then a fourth worker came along. He listened for a few minutes, then pointed to the office windows across the street and said:

"Boys do you ever hear the three owners of this place quarreling about their religious differences?" They admitted they hadn't.

"Do you know why?" he asked. The men shook their heads. "Because there is no profit in it."

IF YOU should hear a song called "Little Old Shack on the Plains" listen to it carefully. It was written by Jimmie Busler, UAW member in Memphis, Tenn., who won a national song-writing contest sponsored by Republic Pictures and Song Hits Magazine with it.

His latest song, says the United Auto Workers paper, is about the housing shortage, and is called "If I Had a House."

Here's an amusing incident told to an organizer by a worker at the Rutter-Rex cotton garment plant in New Orleans about how she slyly spoofed a boss who tried to get her to vote against the union. It's from ADVANCE, Amalgamated Clothing Workers paper.

"This morning the boss came up to me and said, 'You ain't going to vote for the union, are you?'

"Why whatever made you think that?" replied the girl. "I know who started this factory and who paid us wages all these years. You can count on me. I know where to put that X."

Telling the organizer about it later, the girl said: "And I do know where to put that X. Right under 'Yes' for the union. Don't I know what kind of wages those bosses have been paying me and all the rest of the girls!"

Then with a big smile, she added: "The joke of it is that ever since the boss has been patting me on the back, coming around to tell me how good my work is and what a nice girl I am. He should know!" (The Amalgamated won the election 270 to 126.)

PLAYING AROUND

GUILTY MEN—Shows criminals of World War II on trial at Nuremberg with shots of crimes they committed intercut. Timely, effective. Concludes with warning that "the world is resolved to make war less attractive to those who are privileged to lead the people." 16-mm, sound, 10-min. Brandon Films, 1600 Broadway, N. Y. 19, N. Y. Produced by Natl. Film Board of Canada.

★ ★ ★

SISTER KENNY — see your doctor for the medical truth about infantile paralysis. But see this film for an absorbing, moving drama about Sister Kenny's heroic efforts to ease the pain of man. Rosalind Russell imparts courage and strength to the lead role.

★ ★ ★

NO LEAVE, NO LOVE—Another reviewer labeled it NO STORY, NO ACTING. I will let that stand. The screen becomes the arena for the battle-royal comedy antics of Van Johnson, Keenan Wynn and company. Couldn't have happened to nicer people.

★ ★ ★

CLOAK AND DAGGER—is a combination of Saturday afternoon serials strung together in an improbable but enjoyable film. Gary Cooper is the hero of this OSS yarn and Lilli Palmer, a lovely Italian partisan. Mata Hari was a tea party compared to this opus.

★ ★ ★

★ ★ ★

BLACK ANGEL—is by far too complicated a mystery story to be enjoyed. Most of the time is spent figuring out the plot complications. Dan Duryea and Peter Lorre give it a lift—but not enough.

Flicker Front

THOSE GOOD OLD DAYS

By GEORGE WEISSMAN

NOSTALGIA seems to have gripped the movie capital as the recent releases bring back the "good old days"—at least in the musical sense. The tuneful, pleasant songs of yesteryear have an edge for a change over the current flood of psychological violent murder pictures.

"The Jolson Story" leads off the parade with a rousing musical hit that ranks tops among the enjoyable pictures of these times. The flicker is 99 and 44/100% pure music and entertainment as Jolson reels off one hit song after another.

Larry Parks plays the role of Asa Yolson, son of a Washington, D. C. cantor, who breaks into vaudeville by accident. From there on in with a minimum of plot and a maximum of colorful stage numbers, the picture depicts Jolson's rise in the musical world.

Parks does the acting and goes through all of Jolson's traditional gestures, while an off-stage Jolson does the singing. Aided also by a tasteful, technicolor production, "The Jolson Story" is tops on the family list.

"Blue Skies" follows closely on the heels of "The Jolson Story" for honors in the calvacade of the show business. Although lush with the talents of Bing Crosby, Fred Astaire and Joan Caulfield, the picture makes the unfortunate mistake of trying to have a story. And, it is the usual one of a divorced couple being reunited by the haunting refrains of their favorite songs.

In this case it is something special since the songs are the nation's favorites among 42 of Irving Berlin's hits. Crosby, Astaire and Olga San Juan are excellent in the musical and dancing numbers while Billy De Wolfe contributes his comic talents.

Following "Blue Skies," it is pleasant to report that "Margie" concentrates more on story than music to bring back the sentimentalism of the late twenties. There is nothing pretentious about this picture which surrounds the hit song "Margie" with the atmosphere of high school hero-worship, flappers, flagpole sitters. "Three Little Girls in Blue" is another picture that doesn't have any earth-shaking qualities about it. It is just a musical and honest enough to admit same. In a fresh, gay manner, it is a fairly pleasant one at that.

RECENTLY, a picket line of 8,000 union seamen forced the N. Y. Times to eat the words of its naval "expert," Midshipman Hanson Baldwin, who called for a return to the rule of the sea by the harsh, old "bucko mates." He also said the Merchant Marine was degenerating under the influence of unionism.

Evidently he didn't follow the movie pages of his own paper which told of two excellent sea films currently showing in the neighborhood of his own office. The first was the English picture, "The Raiders," made during the war and finally released to the public.

The story concerns a group of survivors in a lifeboat and how they are used to bait a rescue ship into torpedo firing range of a U-boat. The actors are all merchant seamen with nary a professional to be seen. The picture was shot at sea, not in a Hollywood pool. And, it all added up to one of the finest, most exciting tales to reach the screen in tribute to the seamen of the Allied nations.

"Two Years Before The Mast" is another for Mr. Baldwin's and every movie-goer's recommended list. Based on the novel by Richard Dana, Jr., the picture spares no punches or floggings.

IN the finest traditions of "Don't Be A Sucker" and "Teamwork," the new 16-mm two-reeler, "Of These Our People," is one of the best labor films to meet the threat of anti-semitism and hate-mongering.

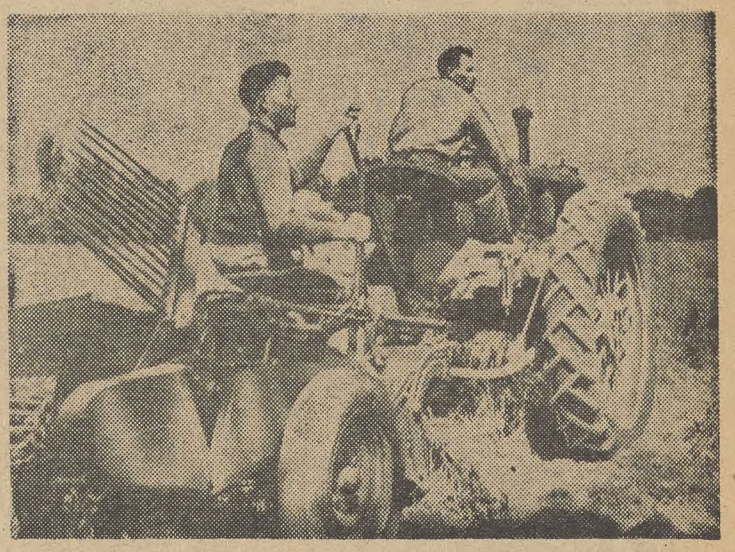
With dignity and clarity, it presents moving evidence that the history of the "children of Israel" in our country is inseparable from the history of America itself. Starting with the landing of the Jews in New Amsterdam in 1654, "Of These Our People" traces their contributions to the growth of America through the nation's growth. There was Haym Solomon, who gave his fortune to Washington to fight the revolution and Meyer Levin, Colin Kelly's flying mate.

Names like Einstein, Gompers, Hank Greenberg, Dr. Bela Schick, Leonard Bernstein, Howard Fast, Miss America (Bess Myerson) and others are constant reminders of the Jew's role in American life and culture.

Jewish farmers, machinists, garment workers and others are portrayed to destroy the pet theories of the Bilbos and Rankins. The picture is a powerful labor weapon in answering the anti-semitic slanders of the KKK'ers and their Nazi-minded followers.

And unless, the labor movement does answer the attacks on its Jewish, Catholic, Negro and other minority members, it will suffer through division. "Of These Our People" is available from Horizon Films, 232 W. 14th St., NY 11 NY.

Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire go through a hilarious song and dance routine in a rendition of one of Irving Berlin's top hits of the last twenty years. Scene is from "Blue Skies," also starring Joan Caulfield.



Jewish farmers till the soil in scene from "Of These Our People," latest 16-mm two-reeler by Horizon Films. The flicker which depicts the history of the Jews in America is a powerful weapon against the hate-mongers.

Aimed at Labor Too

BIG BUSINESS DRIVE HITS SMALL FARMERS

FARM advisers of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce this week were accused of fostering a policy which would drive several million small farmers off their land, and would use them as competition in the industrial labor market to drive down wage rates.

The accusation was made by Facts for Farmers, publication of Farm Research, in N. Y. City. The monthly paper, edited by Charles J. Coe, said:

"Despite the fact that the independent, family-size farm has long been regarded as one to be cherished and safeguarded, the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce experts are calling for its speedy elimination.

FACTS for Farmers cited government statistics showing that farm mechanization has sharply increased, that productivity per worker has risen largely as a result of this, and that farms are larger but are fewer in number.

Census reports show that there has been a 55% increase in tractors on farms, from 1940 to 1945, yet the number of farms with tractors increased only 42%.

Two-thirds of all farms, nearly four million, have no tractors, and of these one and a half million have neither horses nor mules!

In 1945, 219,799 fewer farms existed than in 1940—a drop from 6,096,799 to 5,877,000, nearly half of which took place in the South. The average size farm increased from 174 acres in 1940 to 195 acres in 1945.

Noting that large numbers of farmers cannot benefit from increased mechanization because they lack the capital to buy equipment, Facts for Farmers points out:

"The story of farm mechanization should warn the farmers against the campaign which seeks to spread anti-labor poison about the countryside.

"With two out of every three farmers only a jump or so ahead of displacement from the land, they cannot afford to join with the NAM in a campaign to hit labor over the head.

"Labor is the one group which has a direct interest in helping the working farmers to hold onto their farms. The displacement of these four million or more farm families would lead to sharp slashes in wages and thus bring economic hardship upon the workers as well as upon the farmers."

NOTING that election of a progressive Congress is the key to the problem, Facts for Farmers stated that the tenure of small farmers on the land should be protected.

"Low-cost credit and government-financed tractor and machinery coops should be made available to the small and middle farmers.

"Effective measures should be taken to improve dietary standards and increase the consumption of farm products.

"The promise of farm support prices at not less than 90% of parity should be kept, with a guarantee of full farm production and no forced reduction on the smaller farmers."

Facts for Farmers added, "It would not be unreasonable to ask that the government should guarantee every farm family and farm worker family a minimum annual income of not less than $2,500 a year."

Economic Outlook Says

BIG U. S. SPENDING CAN AVOID CRASH

BIG scale government spending can help the U. S. keep its economy on an even keel and avoid the evils of serious depression, the CIO Economic Outlook, published by the Dept. of Research & Education, declared in its October issue.

In a long discussion of government fiscal policy and its relation to full employment, the Outlook posed the question, "How can we keep the national income at a high level and keep increasing it?"

By all odds the best bet, the Outlook said, "is to keep American workers fully employed at decent wages."

But there may be times, it added, when idle savings develop into huge amounts, spending falls, and men face unemployment.

"When it becomes clear that private demand will not underwrite full production and full employment, the government must be brought into the picture with public works, federal aid to low-cost housing, downward tax adjustments, increased social security payments, and other payments to see that demand for goods and services is kept at high enough levels to preserve full employment," the CIO publication said.

HOW will government spending do that job?

Taking as an example a $10 billion expenditure by government, the Outlook notes that the money passes into the hands of steel manufacturers and others, all of whom, in turn, spend a good part of what they receive. Such "chain-spending" can easily lead to an increase of $30 billion in the national income, the publication said. It might be enough to spell the difference between widespread lay-offs and full employment.

"Debt arising from the construction of new libraries and schools, or from improved health facilities such as free clinics for young children," it said, "involves no direct gain but is clearly worthwhile as a contribution toward a better life for the nation's people . . .

"Money invested by the government in irrigation, public power projects recreation facilities, and the like, is a kind of community capital, a capital investment which helps to increase the wealth and income of all the people."

ASKS HALT TO PROSECUTION OF FISHERMEN

Chmn. Schuyler O. Bland (D. Va.) of the House merchant marine and fisheries committee this week asked Atty. Genl. Clark to hold off on antitrust criminal action against CIO fishermen until the committee can "determine the advisability of additional legislation."

CIO Local 36, Fishermen & Allied Workers had been indicted by a federal grand jury last August of Justice Dept. charges of conspiracy to fix minimum prices. The charge said the fishermen were not workers, but "independent businessmen," and as such not exempt from the Sherman antitrust Act.

The union pointed out that fishermen's demand for minimum prices for fish could be compared to farmers' demand for minimum prices for farm produce.

During the war, the union said, a national policy that guaranteed minimum prices in order to achieve full production was developed, and embraced the fish industry. Bland wrote Clark that was the intent of the Fishermen's Marketing Act of 1934, and said his committee would clarify the law at the next session if necessary. Fear of antitrust prosecution might make buyers hesitate to renew present agreements and thus bring on a stoppage, he said.

Bare Lewis Tie To Nazi Pal

HERMAN GOERING, who bet his life on the theory that the Nazis would conquer the democratic world, toyed with the idea of betting $5,000,000 that John L. Lewis could prevent the re-election of Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1940.

The disclosure of Goering's interest in "stopping Roosevelt at any price" during the first 15 months of World War II came to light last week in a speech by O. John Rogge, special assistant to Atty. General Tom Clark. Rogge was assigned last spring to determine connections between big shot Nazis and their American friends. He spent several months in Germany interviewing Goering and other leading figures in the economic, political and diplomatic life of Hitler's Germany.

THERE is no indication, according to Rogge's speech and other memoranda on the subject which have been circulating in Washington, that the money was paid over to Lewis or that the mine workers' chief was aware of the Nazis' keen interest in his isolationist, anti-Roosevelt activities.

But the record is more explicit in indicating the close personal relationship between Lewis and the late William Rhodes Davis, a shadowy figure of the international world of oil whose principal interest during 1939-40 was to provide petroleum for the surging German army, navy and air forces.

Davis also fancied himself as a peacemaker, and used Lewis's influence to obtain a conference with FDR in September, 1939. It was then that Davis proposed that the President arbitrate a proposed German peace settlement—a proposal that Davis made clear had come to him from Goering.

LAST summer, at Nuremberg—a few months before he robbed the gallows by swallowing potassium cyanide—Goering told the Dept. of Justice official that Davis had "presented himself as a very good friend of John L. Lewis." Davis, Goering added, "told me that by the use of his influence on Lewis he could influence the elections in such a manner that the re-election of Roosevelt . . . could be prevented."

Davis saw Goering in the late summer of 1939, just as the Nazis were launching their attack on Poland. Davis' passport, which permitted him to travel to Italy, had been secured with the help of the mine workers' leader. Davis journeyed up the Axis from Rome to Berlin to discuss American politics with the No. 2 Nazi.

Goering appears from Rogge's speech to have been a little skeptical that only $5,000,000 could beat Roosevelt in the 1940 elections—though he indicated to Rogge during the 1946 interview that Roosevelt's defeat would have been worth at least a hundred million dollars to the Nazi war machine.

ROGGE indicated that Lewis helped pave the way for German purchases of Mexican oil during the summer of 1939. Early in that last peacetime year, Davis is alleged to have brought Lewis together with Joachin Hertslet, a high official in the German economics ministry, who was visiting the U. S.

The Nazis were anxious to buy oil from Mexico, which was facing a boycott by big American and British firms as a result of the nationalization of its own oil resources. Lewis arranged with Mexican labor leaders for an appointment between Davis and Cardenas, then head of the Mexican Republic.

With Hertslet in attendance, conferences were held in Mexico City in July of 1939 and the deal was settled by which Germany received Mexican oil in exchange for industrial products.

On Sept. 19, 1939, Lewis wrote to President Roosevelt transmitting a cable from Hertslet to Davis in which the Nazi leader urged American neutrality in the war and promised that the German government would behave itself after it had finished swallowing Poland.

Throughout 1939 and 1940 Lewis was reported as writing or talking on frequent occasions to FDR and Asst. Sec. of State Adolph Berle.

In Sept. 1939, as one example, Lewis called personally at the home of Berle to plead again that "the time had come for a general peace" and that oil-man Davis, just returned to the U. S. from Germany, had a message from a Nazi leader indicating a way to settle the war. Roosevelt constantly maintained that any such proposition must come officially from the Nazi government.

SMASH GOP BRASSHATS NOVEMBER 5—MURRAY

IF reaction wins Nov. 5, it will launch the most vicious assault on labor's rights in American history. That warning was coupled with a plea from Philip Murray for a mass turnout of voters, as the CIO President called for the defeat of the Republican brasshats who led the fight for high prices, high rents and high profits in the last session of Congress.

Murray, in broadcasts over two national hookups, declared that a big vote Nov. 5 will be the best possible answer the people can give to "the billionaire corporations whose unlimited hunger for profits sought to undermine the New Deal and who now seek a reconverted America upon their own profiteering terms."

Declaring that it is "these corporations and their reactionary political spokesmen who block the path to a shining future," Murray said the major blame for the reactionary record of the last Congress lays with "the Republican leadership, who yearning for the days of Hoover, introduced no less than 40 bills in the last session to cripple labor and destroy its organizations."

THIS election campaign of 1946 is a vital one in American history. All over our country our citizens are taking stock. We are looking back over the road we have travelled since the last election at the future which confronts us.

with growing bittnerness that despite meager wage increases their pay envelopes continue to shrink. They are discovering that their take-home pay grows smaller every month. While the worker continues to suffer losses in wages, the purchasing power for the dollars remaining in his pay envelope declines at a sickening pace.

For him the choice in the present election is a choice directed against those who have betrayed his living standards and economic security.

The reactionary politician whose stock in trade is confusion and division would like to make it appear that the desperate plight of the American worker is a minor problem wtihout political significance. But you and I know that the plight of the American worker is a basic problem which vexes our economy. Moreover, it is a problem which casts its shadow over the homes, not of an isolated and narrow group, but over the vast majority of the American people—for the vast majority of us are wage earners.

The profit-hungry monopolists and their reactionary political spokesmen seek to coin demagogic phrases in order to hide their plan for the betrayal of the economic security of the masses of our people. But we know who they are and we will make our knowedge and our anger effective at the polls.

THE workers of America who have known insecurity before in the days of the Republican Hoover depression—the housewives of America who have struggled before with the dilemna of insufficient pay envelopes to fill hungry mouths—know exactly what the reactionary Republicans have in store for them.

Today, more than ever, the housewives of America have become an articulate and determined political force. The housewives of America have witnessed first-hand what other groups in our economy have already experienced on other fronts — the blackmailing power of American monopoly.

The housewife, hunting frantically for meats to feed her family, has seen the shadow of the meat trust behind every butcher's counter in the land. She has watched the sinister skyrocketing of meat prices. She has observed the manner in which artifically-stimulated scarcities convert ordinary necessities of the dinner table into strange and rare luxuries. She knows of her experience who the enemy is.

She has witnessed herself the same monopoly forces at work which have sought to break her husband's union and cut his pay envelope. She knows she must vote and give her answer to the reactionary political spokesmen of the meat trust who killed OPA.

BUT it is not only food, clothing and medical care and the wherewithal to purchase them about which millions of Americans are wondering on the eve of this, our first post-war election.

Literally millions of us are concerned over the problem of shelter. The armies of veterans wandering over the face of our land, seeking a roof over their heads, forced to live in unhealthy surroundings amidst indignities, without the facilities that are basic for living and raising a family—these veterans bitterly pondering the promises of a better life so casually broken by profiteers—they too know the score.

They have become aware that the reactionary creed is profits and scarcity. They know too well that a Republican victory means a death blow to their hope for adequate housing on terms that are within their means.

THE small businessman — he too is pondering the political future of our country. At an unbelievable rate since the termination of the war, he has fallen prey to artifically created shortages of big business monopolies. He has seen a small, increasingly powerful group of industrial magnates in this country manipulate and cripple our productive machine to force prices up, to break labor unions, to starve the country into submission to their imperious demands.

He realizes now more than ever that he is a pawn in the drive of business monopolies for unchallenged control of every phase of our economy. He knows what the Republican Party has in store for him — intensified insecurity and economic helplessness.

THE American people today want peace, security, an equal opportunity and full democracy for all of our people. We want forever to banish the threat of war, privilege for the greedy few, depressions and the fear of depressions.

The kind of a future that the election returns add up to depends on us. It depends upon each of us. It depends upon how many of us vote and how we vote on Election Day. That is why the CIO is urging every American to go to the polls next Tuesday. That is why we are asking every citizen to vote thoughtfully and wisely on November 5th.

We all know from our experiences under the Roosevelt era that this democracy of ours carries a rich promise of security and plenty. We all know that unemployment and misery can be banished.

We all know, more than at any time in our history, what the forces are in our national life which stand in the way of a good life for all the people. They are the billionaire corporations whose unlimited hunger for profits sought to undermine the New Deal and who now seek a reconverted America upon their own profiteering terms. It is these corporations and their reactionary political spokesmen who block the path to a shining future.

These forces of greed are symbolized by the Old Guard Republicans, the Robert Taft and Joseph Martin Republicans who have adopted the Hoover program and who in concert with southern poll-taxers are seeking to tighten reaction's grip on our economy.

But let no one forget who bears the major responsibility for the success of this coalition. It was the Republican leadership, who, yearning for the days of Hoover, introduced no less than 40 bills in the last session of Congress to cripple labor and destroy its organizations. Several of those bills passed the Congress.

But what we witnessed in the Seventy-ninth Congress is only a curtain raiser. If reaction wins on November 5th, it will launch the most vicious assault on labor's rights in American history. Not only are the rights won by labor after years of struggle at stake in these elections, but, indeed, organized labor's very right to live.

THE offensive of big business has been most successful in its emasculation of price controls. When the Republican brass hats in Congress gutted OPA, they took from every American's income one dollar out of every four earned since June 30th. They cleared the way for the trusts to reach into every pocket, into every home. Living costs have risen 30% since June 30th, and are still rising. Republican prices will pile up more profits in the swollen coffers of monopoly.

Nowhere has the Old Guard Republican offensive against the nation's living standards been more brazen than in their support of the meat trust's policy of "starve or else." The meat trust, supported by Senators Taft and Wherry, restorted to blackmail. It refused to buy or slaughter cattle and withheld supplies from the market until the American people were starved into submission.

Now we will get meat—but at Republican prices—at prices that millions on millions of families cannot afford to pay. But the Packers will pay off—to the Republican Party as a reward for their successful scuttling of all price protection. In 1944 the Republican Party received $43,000 from 18 officers and stockholders of the Big Four meat packers, Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson. We do not, yet, know how much it will be in 1946.

INDICATIVE of the ruthlessness of the present Big Business offensive against the people was the callous refusal of the reactionary coalition of Old Guard Republicans and their allies to enact a 65c minimum wage law in the last Congress. Millions of workers today still don't earn 65c an hour—$26 a week, on which to feed and clothe their families.

Imagine the hearts and minds of men who refuse a family the meager income of $26 a week and at the same time insist that prices and rents are too low, that profits, highest in history, are too small.

Another shameless chapter in this shameless record has been on the vital question of housing. Millions of Americans—veterans, workers, professional people—lack decent shelter in this, the richest nation in the world. Yet, on vote after vote the Republican Old Guard leaders teamed up to fight housing legislation and deny the people's needs.

Even now, the attack continues: The Republican Party is echoing the battle cry of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, representing the big banks and insurance companies in their capacity as landlords, in demanding an immediate 15% rent increase. Rent increases! This is their only answer to the ill-housed and the homeless.

To combat the hateful practice of race discrimination, Franklin Roosevelt created the FEPC. In this last session, the Old Guard Republican leaders joined up with tory democrats to destroy the FEPC.

Every Negro, every member of a minority group, every foreign born American should remember on Election Day that 118 Republican Congressmen refused to sign the Discharge Petition to bring FEPC legislation to the floor of Congress for a vote despite the solemn pledge in their party platform.

THE issues which confront us are too sharp. They have touched the people too closely to be obscured by slick slogans or siren songs. Hooverism is Hooverism. It means high prices and high profits, continuing shortages and intensification of a tragedy of millions without shelter — it means want and degradation. No one is going to be fooled or intimidated into voting for it because it is ornamented with a catch phrase or a demagogic appeal.

Let America speak out on Election Day. Let it be said with our votes that we fight for fair prices and against the profiteers. Let it be said now, that we fight for a minimum wage of 65c an hour. Let it be on the record that with all our strength, we fight for a permanent FEPC.

Let America tell our veterans, millions of them, who need homes, tonight, that we will throw our full strength behind legislation to meet their needs.

Let every reactionary Old Guard Republican and Southern Poll-Taxer know that we repudiate their attack upon the Wagner Act, and the right of labor to free collective bargaining.

Let us serve notice on the National Association of Real Estate Boards, that we insist on keeping rents down. Let us meet and defeat the offensive of Big Business by retiring their Congressional spokesmen to private life.

THROUGH long years of suffering and sacrifice, the right to vote to determine our own destiny, has been won by the American people. It is our sacred duty to use that right. I urge you to use it on November 5th. I urge every American who hears my voice tonight to go to the polls on Election Day.

Examine the record of your candidates. Vote for those whose records show that they have kept faith with the people. Defeat the men who have betrayed the people's mandate.

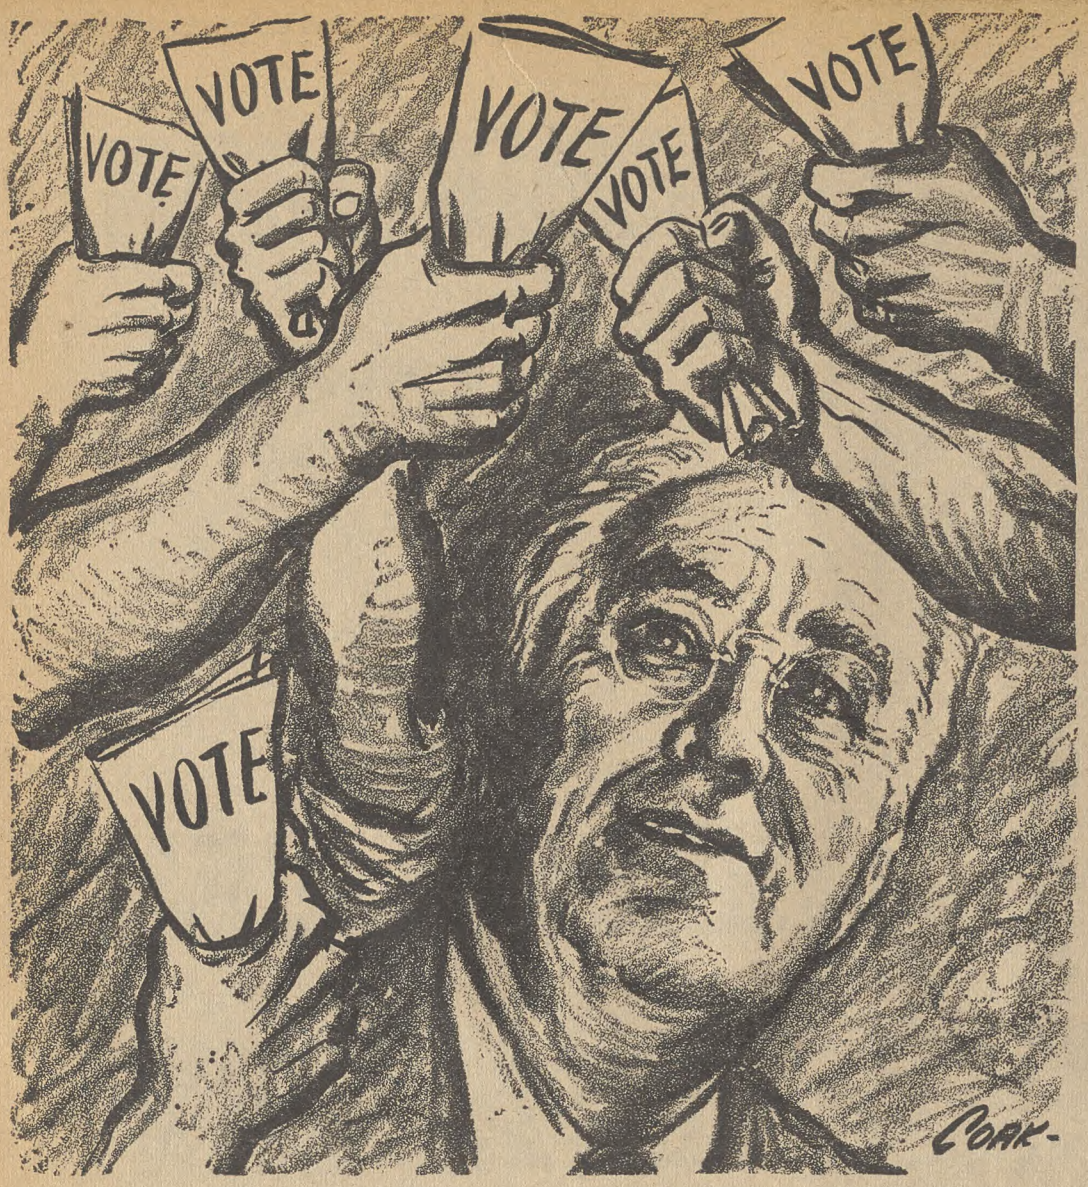
VOTE NOVEMBER 5



ALL OUT TO THE POLLS

THE size of the vote on November 5 will tell the story.

If it is small, we are in danger of being saddled for the next two years with a Congress even more reactionary than the last.

If it is large, we can defeat the tories and change the old Republican-polltaxer majority into a progressive majority.

The results, for progress or reaction, will be in direct proportion to the size of the vote, particularly in the cities and industrial areas.

The reason for this, according to the National Opinion Research Center of the University of Denver, is that the less privileged elements in the population, most of whom vote Democratic, are harder to get out to the polls than are the more prosperous, a majority of whom are Republicans.

"The operation of this turnout factor," it declares, "is particularly noticeable in mid-term elections, which lack incentive of a Presidential contest to bring voters to the polls."

IT AMOUNTS to this: Labor and other progressive voters from lower-income groups represent the great majority. If they are alert to the issues and flock to the polls, a progressive victory is assured.

But if, on the other hand, there is too much apathy and reaction can keep the vote small by hook or by crook, then the tories have a chance—their only chance.

Roosevelt and his New Deal won handsomely in 1932, when the total vote was considerably larger than in the previous elections.

In 1936, 1940 and 1944, the common people turned out in large numbers and the total vote was 43, 47 and 45 million. As a result, Roosevelt won each time along with a goodly number of progressive Congressmen.

But in the off-years 1938 and 1942, the total vote shrank to 36¼ and 28 million. Rea tion had its chance, and many anti-New De anti-labor reactionaries were elected.

THIS YEAR reaction has been counting i chickens before they are hatched, predic ing a tory Republican swing.

It bases these predictions, not on any desi of the majority of the American people for a even more reactionary Congress, but on th hope that the majority of the people will no bother to vote.

Various opinion polls have reported muc apathy among American voters this year an predicted a total vote even lower than i 1938, though there are 10 million more eligibl voters.

Such predictions, of course, are made to dis courage progressives, but they should hav the opposite effect of arousing them to ge out the vote.

Are the American people going to let a tory minority ride over them and make a mockery of democracy, simply because too many fail to do their democratic duty of voting.

THE CIO has given its answer by making a large turnout to the polls the No. 1 task of every union, every council and every member.

If you fail to vote November 5, and to get everyone within your reach to vote, you will have only yourself to blame for the high-price, low-wage, anti-labor and depression-breeding miseries resulting from a tory Republican victory.

But if every CIO member and every other progressive will vote, and get his family and friends to do the same, we have it in our power to win a great victory for the progress and prosperity desired by the American people.

All out to the polls on November 5!

BY LEN DE CAUX

IF YOU had to sit down just before elections to write a column entitled "Looking Ahead", knowing most readers would get it after the elections, what would say?

Well, that's just what I said. And, having said nuts to it, I decided to seek someone who really should know the future and let him, rather than me, go out on a limb.

Let others interview the ordinary man on the street, I decided to get the real lowdown from the man on THE Street.

Doesn't he make his money by gambling on "futures", I thought, or by shrewd and far-seeing investments? And doesn't he help determine the future through his financial control of industry, press and quite a few politicians?

I FOUND Mr. Big Business on THE Street all right, or rather in his office far above it. He was sitting on the lid of a box labeled Wages and Production", with no ceiling on prices or profits above him, and he was actually weeping as he fumbled through yards of ticker tape.

"You poor fellow", I said, you must feel awfully exposed without a ceiling."

"Nossir," he retorted, "that's the way I like it.

"Well, B. B., to get down to business, our readers would like to know what you think of the future," I said, taking out my notebook.

"Lousy", said he.

"You mean you're expecting the elections will throw out your stooges . . . pardon me, the Congressmen in favor, and that the new Congress will legislate for labor and the common people."

"Hell, no" he replied. "Haven't you read my papers? They're all predicting a conservative Republican sweep and another period of Hoov . . . I mean Coolidge prosperity."

"You should be happy then. Aren't your stocks going up at the prospect?"

"Don't be impertinent, young fellow. You've seen how they've been skidding. What do you think I am, a sucker? The market won't go up till I buy, and I'm not buying till I know what's going to happen."

SOMEWHAT confused by the rarefied atmosphere of big business thinking, I asked Mr. B to simplify his ideas so common folks might understand them.

"The way it looks to my level of thinking", I said, "you should be throwing your silk hat in the air and cheering, instead of weeping.

"You had your way in the last Congress. The excess profits tax was abolished, the ceiling has been taken off prices, and none of the legislation you opposed was passed.

"Recent reports I've seen show net profits after taxes doubled or tripled, big extra dividends are being announced right and left, and you say you expect the next Congress to do better by you than the last.

"So why so sad?"

"Young man," he said, "I can see you know nothing about business. We on The Street gamble, I mean build, on the future, not on the past. And the future's mighty uncertain.

"Don't you realize labor's organized these days? So prices and profits can't go up without the damned unions asking for higher wages.

"Also, business can't keep improving unless people have enough money to buy, and all reports indicate that most people have little savings and won't, or can't, buy even at present prices.

"Then there's that PAC, trying to get every Tom, Dick and Harry to vote. If they succeed, the next Congress . . ."

"But" I interrupted, " I thought your papers predicted . . . . . "

"Yes, I know," he growled. "So we get a bigger tory majority in the next Congress, what then? Prices will go up further, sure, profits will be taxed less, and there'll be less coddling of labor.

"But what happens to business when profits go up and purchasing power goes down? The unions are going to demand higher wages anyhow. They'll raise hell when Congress tries to put them out of business. And when the depression comes . . . . . "

"You mean there'll be chaos, confusion . . . . . "

"Shut up," he said, "that's our slogan."

Washington Plebiscite

'VOTELESS' CAPITAL GOES TO THE POLLS

By FRED d'AVILA

WHEN a city of nearly a million peope has a member of the Ku Klux Klan for "mayor," it's a grim landmark on the road to reaction.

When the residents of that city can't even cast a vote against that office holder, it's a blot on the democracy which the United States preaches to the rest of the world.

The city is the combination of stately government buildings, imposing embassies and sprawling slums known as Washington.

The people of Washington who would like to vote him out of office haven't had the right of self-government since 1878.

THIS November 5, while all the rest of the nation goes to the polls with the understanding that votes they cast will have concrete and immediate effect, Washington will engage in an informal plebiscite, which in a way is almost as important as those held in several European nations.

The issues are simple:

- Shall Washington have the right to elect its own local officials?
- Shall it have the right to vote for the President of the U. S. and for members of Congress?

In 1938, when a referendum was held on these questions, the people voted by huge majorities for both propositions. In a 1946 Washington Post poll of public opinion, 84% of those questioned favored home rule.

THE people are confident that the 1946 referendum will pile up even greater majorities than the 1938 vote. They hope that it will convince Congress that it should abolish the present dictatorial Commission form of government, with 531 members of the House and Senate acting as "city council" for the nation's capital.

They point out—somewhat bitterly—that Washington has more population than each of 14 states (Nevada, Utah, Montana, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, Idaho, North Dakota, South Dakota, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Delaware). These states have 53 Senators and Representatives in Congress. Washington has none.

This is the second of two articles on the right to vote in the District of Columbia, amplifying a CIO Convention resolution calling for D. C. suffrage and pointing out that "free and democratic elections . . . are the greatest guarantee for the preservation of democracy and our basic freedoms."

They have become so concerned with Congress' failure to take action on slums, on inadequate hospitals and other public institutions, on health conditions and on school buildings, that they have banded together in the Central Suffrage Conference to demand their political freedom. The Conference is composed of representatives from more than 300 organizations, ranging from CIO and AFL to the Board of Trade.

WASHINGTONIANS are painfully aware that the city is more than Embassy Row and fine government buildings, with a larger area devoted to parks than any other city. For only a short walk from the nation's Capitol, thousands of people are jammed together in rat-ridden slums, breeding grounds of tuberculosis, vice and all the other ills common to wretchedly inadequate housing.

A health and hospital survey showed that 40% of the Negro population and 12% of the white live in dwellings either in need of major structural repairs, or without inside water supples or toilet facilities, or having two or all of these deficiencies.

The survey said that 25,000 dwelling units have either outside hydrants or outside toilets or both, and the devices are so constructed that at all times there is serious danger of back-siphonage which would introduce sewage into the water supply.

Washington, the survey said, has 3,843 hospital beds. It needs a thousand more. Of those it has, 2,000 are in obsolete structures. The hospitals are rated lowest among cities of more than half a million population.

Wth 28% of the population Negro, there is not one hospital that offers private or semi-private rooms for members of this race who are so seriously ill that they must have absolute quiet.

PART of the trouble is lack of money. When Congress took over control of the District in 1878, it agreed to provide 50% of the D. C. budget in return for many services—including maintenance of even the National Zoo! Now it provides just $6 million a year—only 8% of Washington's 1945 expenses.

But money isn't everything. The cumbersome form of government, is even worse. The three Commissioners who supervise Washington are appointed by the President. They have no real authority. Congress even names streets. And most Congressmen, who have fish to fry for people back home, display a noticeable lack of interest in Washington slums, Washington hospitals and Washington schools. Time spent on these problems doesn't add up to votes.

The situation was nicely put by Dr. C. E. A. Winslow in a health and hospital survey. He said.

"The student of any phase of the government of the District of Columbia is forcibly struck by the handicaps involved in the basic form of that government itself . . .

"That nearly a million people are disfranchised and have no share in their own self-government is a violation of the fundamental principles for which we have fought the Revolutionary and two World Wars; and in its actual working, it makes flexible and effective administration very difficult . . .

"The system has the serious fault that the real governing bodies have no responsibility to the people who are governed.

"If a necessary project is blocked by the whim of an alderman of any other city or if an alderman interferes on behalf of some employe who happens to be a friend, the citizens can hold such alderman responsible.

"If . . . a Congressman should play such a role in the affairs of the District, the voteless citizens have no defense.

"We believe a reform in this respect is fundamentally essential. Our first and most fundamental recommendation therefore is 'that the strongest possible pressure be brought to bear on Congress to secure for the residents of the District of Columbia full powers of self-government for the District itself and representation of the District in the Congress of the U. S.'"

TYPICAL of the difficulties facing Washington residents is the problem of securing adequate appropritions for the city budget. A fantastic operation, involving 21 different governmental actions, finally leads to approval by President Truman after an independent and often rambunctious and inconsiderate Congress has knifed off vitally needed funds.

"Though Congressional committees hold hearings on the local budget each year, there is but slight opportunity for the citizens and taxpayers to present their needs and desires in proper fashion.

"The members of these committees have but scant opportunity to ascertain the real facts, and are often misled by the representatives of special interest groups, or by the personal predilections of particular members of the committees.

"Under this system the people of the District have no control whatsoever over the expenditure of the money that is taken away from them in taxes, and should additional taxes be levied there is no assurance that the increased revenues would be used for needed municipal services or improvements."

WASHINGTON residents are bowed but not beaten. By and large, they're informed about public affairs and progressive in their outlook—Washington Post polls have showed that they favor strong price control, public building of low-cost homes, aid to starving peoples abroad with 20% supporting a return to rationing if necessary, and cooperation with all other countries to make the United Nations a potent instrument for peace.

Cheered by President Truman's complete support in their fight for local self-government and national representation, they hope that progressive citizens in all the 48 states will join their battle.

And—as the Washington CIO Council points out—the most practical way to help is to see that YOUR Congressman and YOUR Senators vote for bills providing D. C. national representation and D. C. local self-government, when they are introduced in the 80th session of Congress.

West Coast Sea Unions

BATTEN HATCHES FOR LONG STRIKE

By MORRIS WATSON

A JOINT coastwise strike strategy and negotiating committee was set up at San Francisco this week with instructions to demand and obtain immediate resumption of negotiations in the West Coast Longshore and Engineer strikes.

The new committee also was instructed to inform the rank and file of the striking unions—the Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. and the Intl. Longshoremen and Warehousemen—and the unions supporting the strike to dig in for a winter-long tieup.

The committee was set up by the Committee for Maritime Unity meeting jointly with the negotiating committees of the MEBA and ILWU. Its personnel consists of the two negotiating committees plus a leading officer from each of the other unions attached to the CMU.

The joint strike strategy and negotiating committee was expected to issue directives to all port CMU committees respecting appropriate action to be taken in preparation for a long strike.

"This is the first step to be taken by the unions to tighten up organization for a long, drawn-out strike," said CMU Co-Chairman Harry Bridges. "It is apparent from the shipowners' attitude that no early settlement—or even further negotiations with one of the unions—is in sight.

"It looks as if the strike will go into next year. The unions are convinced their existence is at stake. Moreover, the shipowners are guaranteed by government funds against any real money losses, no matter how long the strike continues."

A special CMU meeting set up the joint committee after hearing the MESA negotiating committee report that it had been rebuffed in its offer to settle on the same terms reached for the East and Gulf Coasts. And after hearing the ILWU coast longshore negotiating committee report that the Waterfront Employers Assn. displayed indifference to its offer for settlement of the one remaining issue of the longshore strike.

Another development in the situation was the announcement this week that Bridges, as ILWU president, will file suit for $6 million against the Waterfront Employers. The suit will be filed in superior court of San Francisco on behalf of 20,000 West Coast dock workers who have not received retroactive pay due under a contract signed last June 14.

The suit will ask $5,000,000 due under the agreement, $1,000,000 as punitive damages, and $1,000 a day interest since Oct. 19. The suit will allege deliberate violation of the Calif. Labor Code in withholding wages due under a collective bargaining agreement.

WEA notified the ILWU Oct. 19 that its members would not pay the retroactive wage increase of 22c an hour by Oct. 31, as they had agreed to do in the contract. The ILWU is therefore suing on the ground of an anticipatory breach of contract and asking 7% interest on money due.

Murray Declares:

STEELWORKERS TO ASK RAISE

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last weekend blamed "the worst inflation in the country's history" on "the greed, lust and selfishness of American business and industry" and asserted that the Steelworkers which he also heads will seek increases when contract negotiations open Jan. 1.

Murray, who spoke at the seventh convention of District 7 of the Steelworkers at Philadelphia, said later that the exact amount of the increase would be determined by the Steelworkers wage policy committee.

The declaration that the union would seek pay increases brought a ten-minute ovation from 266 delegates representing 40,000 members of the union in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

Murray declared the recent meat shortage a strike against the people and the Government, accused cotton manufacturers of hoarding and said that with the steel plants turning out almost as much steel as during the last war year, the workers should not be blamed for any lack of steel.

The CIO president declared that pay envelopes worth $50 to $60 three months ago are only worth $35 to $40 today.

Two documents issued this week fully substantiated Murray's diagnosis of the economic situation. One was the report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics that showed that from mid-June to mid-September retail food prices advanced 19.6%, with 1.7% of the increase occurring Aug. 13 to Sept. 17 and that further increases would be recorded in November when the effects of the decontrol of meats and other foods would be registered.

The ability of the steel industry to pay wage increases became apparent with the quarterly report of the U. S. Steel Corp., which showed that for the third quarter of this year it earned the astronomical sum of $33,329,353, the highest income for any peacetime quarter since 1937.

For the quarter ended Sept. 30, the net income was $3.11 a common share of stock compared to 61c a quarter from the same period in 1945, and 87c a share for the second quarter of 1946.

Rain failed to halt the picketing of the Philadelphia Board of Education by members of the CIO Teachers Union of the CIO Public Workers, other CIO unions and civic organizations. The teachers are asking for a $500 yearly increase and one of the signs quotes Superintendent Stoddard of the Philadelphia Schools who once declared, "You can't pay rents or buy groceries with inner satisfaction."

END WAGE CURBS—UAW

THE CIO Auto Workers last weekend demanded that President Truman lift all wage controls as it served notice on two more companies, Packard and Hudson, that it wished to reopen wage negotiations. Increased pay talks were scheduled to open this week with Chrysler.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said that in face of an attack by the Natl. Assn. of Mfgs. and their agents in Congress, Federal agencies allowed prices to mount even months before the original OPA Act expired.

He declared that the wage gains made by the workers last winter were soon wiped out and that the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed in July that the average weekly real wage had declined 16.3% from the wartime high.

Reuther said that in view of the fact that prices continued to climb with the removal of price controls, the UAW executive board had voted two weeks ago to demand that wage controls be eliminated immediately in order that labor may negotiate with employers in an atmosphere of free collective bargaining.

ALLIS CHALMERS, COPS WAR ON PICKETS

By ESTHER HANDLER

COMPANY-PROVOKED and police violence flared on the Allis-Chalmers picket lines in West Allis, Wis., this week as the six-month-old strike appeared to be reaching a climax.

Most disturbances and scuffles were caused when company goon squads attempted to drive flying wedges through the lines to let scabs into the plant. Trouble centered around auto gates when scabs attempted to mow down pickets with their cars.

The entire law enforcement body of Milwaukee county was mobilized to form an iron ring around the plant. Police arrived in busloads and as many as 600 police and deputies were on hand when plant shifts changed.

Attempting to prevent picketing altogether, police, lined two deep, locked arms to form solid walls between pickets and plant gates. In some cases pickets lines were moved by force to the other side of the street. Pickets were manhandled by the police and several were beaten unconscious.

The strikers' mounting anger at the company's failure to accept the union's final offer to end the strike immediately pending arbitration of the dispute resulted in steadily increasing picket lines. There were as many as 15,000 pickets at the plant's 17 gates around quitting time, as Allis Chalmers strikers were joined by hundreds of workers from nearby plants.

Eleven pickets were arrested and warrants were sworn out for seven more this week in a company-engineered move to have police pick off most active strike leaders. Twenty-one union officers and stewards were served with summons charging violation of a court order or "illegal picketing."

Joseph Mattson, Auto Workers regional director, wired Gov. Walter S. Goodland asking him to call a union-company conference to seek peaceful end of the dispute. Mattson said the lives of workers and citizens were being endangered by professional strike breakers, thugs and hoodlums.

Negotiations were recessed indefinitely Oct. 25 when the company rejected the union's offer to settle the dispute through arbitration. The company's action made it clear that it did not intend to use reasonable methods to end the strike which began at La Porte, Ind., March 14, and rapidly spread to seven other plants.

ASK AT LEAST 26c

A WAGE increase demand of 26c an hour in the nation's rubber and allied products industries was unanimously approved this week by the policy committee of the CIO United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum & Plastic Workers, meeting at South Bend, Ind.

The demand is "subject to upward revision in the event that any further substantial increases occur in the cost of living between now and the time the settlement is made," Union Pres. L. S. Buckmaster declared.

The date of Nov. 1, 1946 was set for the demand to provide a backstop for retroactive increases should negotiations between the union and the companies be prolonged.

Buckmaster said negotiations would opened on a "Big Four" basis "as soon as possible," in accordance with terms of an agreement signed last March 2 between the union and the Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and U. S. Rubber companies.

WIN $4 MILLION BOOST

A strike of 7,000 Western Union workers in N. Y. City was averted four hours before the contract termination deadline this week, when agreement was reached bringing $4 million dollars annualy in wage increases and other benefits to members of the CIO American Communications Assn.

The new contract which terminates April 1, 1947, brings wage increases averaging 16½c an hour for non-messengers and 10c an hour for messengers, retroactive to last June 1.

In addition the workers won a night differential of 10% and 20 other improvements in the present agreement involving job security, promotions and protection from mechanization.

FTA WINS STRIKE AT THREE PLANTS

Settlement of a 12-day strike involving 1,100 workers at three plants of the Buckeye Cotton Oil Co. with substantial gains for the strikers was announced by Pres. Donald Henderson, of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers, this week.

The strike was one of the first in the history of the Southern cotton oil industry and of the Buckeye company's parent concern, the $200,000,000 Procter and Gamble Co., and was carried on simultaneously in three Southern cities—Memphis, Tenn.; Corinth, Miss., and Montgomery, Ala.

Another precedent was set in the application of the contract terms, except wage rates, to two other Buckeye plants in Little Rock, Ark., and Charlotte, N. C.

The settlement raised minimum wage rates to 70c an hour, with a top of $1.20 and with automatic wage reopening when the work week falls below 48 hours.

DEMAND THREAT PROBE

THE CIO Clothing Workers this week called upon U. S. Attorney General Tom C. Clark for an immediate investigation of threats of mob violence and other "coersive attempts to intimidate and interfere with the rights of self-organization" of employes of Salant and Salant at their plant in Parsons, Tenn.

In a protest to the Attorney General, John J. Abt, the union's special counsel, charged that a mob drove union employes out of Parsons on Aug. 31 last. Two weeks later, he declared, a union member was threatened with death.

Abt also wrote that on Sept. 26 while four Clothing Workers' organizers were conducting a meeting outside the Salant and Salant factory in Parsons, Mayor William Long appeared at the head of a mob of 50 men and ordered the organizers to leave town.

When one organizer, Ed Blair, asked Long if he was the mayor, Long replied, "Hell, yes, and if you don't believe it, just start something," Abt declared.

U. S. Survey Shows

SOUTH NEEDS UNIONS

THE OCTOBER issue of U. S. Labor Dept.'s Monthly Labor Review dishes out cold statistics that should prove to the South that it should welcome organization of its workers for its own good.

The Review says that the South will continue to lose workers to other sections of the country as long as it does not offer comparable job opportunities, declaring:

"Under conditions of fairly high employment, for example, job opportunities in New England, and in the East North Central areas, and in the Pacific region are likely to be more favorable than in the South, so that migration from the South to these areas are bound to occur . . .

"Trained and able-bodied labor is just as much a productive asset as a mine, a stand of timber, or 40 acres of fertile farm land. One of the South's major problems is how to best utilize this immensely valuable productive asste."

But the South won't keep its as long as non-unionized plants depress wages.

Although average wages rose in the South 8% more than in the country as a whole during the 1939-44 period, they still lagged in 1944 behind the average figure for the nation by more than $500 annually, actually $1,798 compared to $2,302.

Wages in the South need not necessarily be depressed, the facts uncovered by the Labor Dept. statisticians show.

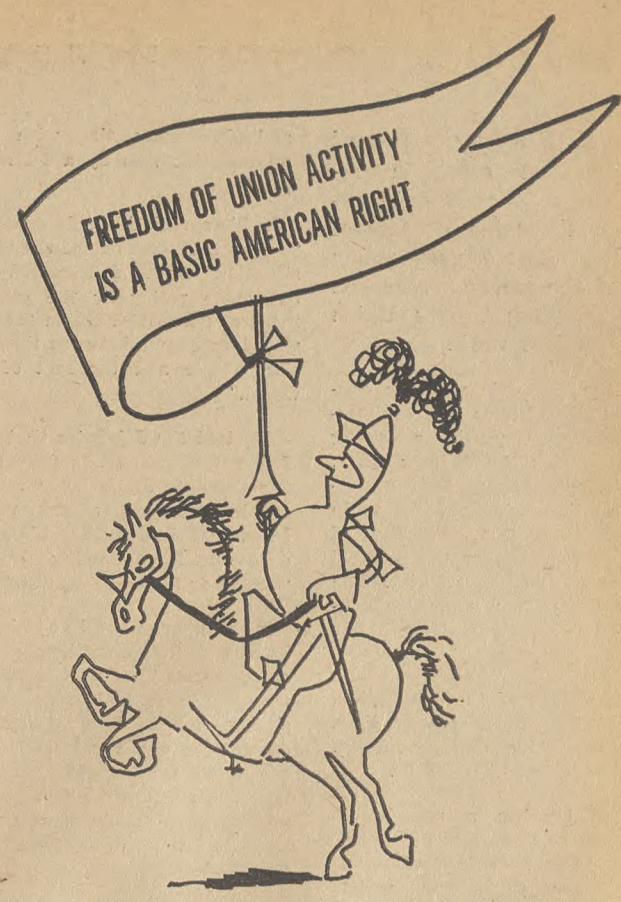
The Review says, "In mining, the presence of the high-wage petroleum industry raised the average annual wages (for the industry) in the Southwest above the level of the country as a whole." The writers should have pointed out that the wage levels are high in the Southwest oil industry because of the Workers.

(The four Southwestern states referred to are Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Texas. The survey also covered nine other states in the South, the Southeastern States, Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi.)

The old, old argument that wages need not be high in the South because "it's much cheaper to live there," is effectively punctured by the Labor Dept. figures.

While the average rise in consumers prices for 34 large cities across the country between August, 1939 and June, 1946 was 35%, seven out of ten large cities in the South showed a greater increase. Three cities, Mobile, Ala., Richmond, Va., and Houston, Tex., showed less rapid increase in the cost of living.

During the 7-year period, Savannah, Ga. and Jacksonville, Fla. led the nation in consumer cost rises with 41.6% and 40.5% respectively. They were followed by the Pacific coast cities of Portland, Ore., and San Francisco. Then came Birmingham, Ala., the Dixie steel center, with a 38.4% living cost boost.



Wise Up On Your Civil Rights

YOU'LL want to own a copy of YOUR CIVIL RIGHTS, the new, attracive CIO handbook for union members and officials.

It gives the low-down on your rights and privileges as a union member and as an American citizen on a wide variety of problems—distributing leaflets, picketing, street meetings, canvassing house-to-house, carrying out your union business.

The handbook is written in simple, layman's English. It avoids fancy "lawyer talk" in discussing these problems. It's brightly illustrated.

And it backs up each point with short, important quotations from decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court which spell out your rights under the Constitution and the laws.

"This pamphlet has been designed as a tool," YOUR CIVIL RIGHTS declares in its first sentence. "A right or a liberty does not do anybody any good if it is written in a law book but ignored by a law enforcement officer.

"The purpose of this pamphlet is to prevent violations of your rights before they occur by enabling you to bring to the attention of the proper officials the fact that you, as a trade union member or organizer, have certain basic rights which cannot be interfered with."

The pamphlet is broken down into major sections and conveniently indexed for ease and speed to help the reader find the type of case in which he may be interested. The principal sections are concerned with a discussion of how you can protect your rights; the laws which protect your liberties; the role of the Supreme Court in defending those rights; the protection offered by the Wagner Act; your right to picket; and a listing of U. S. district attorneys throughout the country to whom you may turn for protection against civil liberties violators.

YOUR CIVIL RIGHTS also lists the principal cases which have served to set precedents for the defense of American basic freedoms in labor cases.

The pamphlet contains an introduction by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who stresses the necessity of CIO members learning at least the broad outlines of their labor rights, and of defending them militantly.

Prepared by the CIO Legal Department, Lee Pressman, General Counsel, YOUR CIVIL RIGHTS concludes with this warning:

". . . We must never lose sight of the importance of organization as a means of defending and advancing civil rights. If an individual is deprived of his rights, he is usually helpless to do very much about it by himself. Only through the power and the strength of his labor organization can he obtain from the courts a real measure of protection of his constitutional rights."

Copies of the 68-page handbook, YOUR CIVIL RIGHTS, may be ordered from the Publicity Department, CIO, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. 20c a copy, 100 for $15.

BRITISH UNIONS VOTE 3-2 ON FOREIGN POLICY

SUPPORT for a program of continued economic reform and a 3-2 endorsement—after considerable debate—of Britain's foreign policy marked the annual convention of the British Trades Union Congress last week.

On the domestic side the convention of Britian's powerful union movement passed a strong resolution for the 40-hour week, and indicated support of a program of increasing production in order to improve the standard of living and strengther the political position of the Labor Party. The TUC's 6½ million members constitute the backbone of the Labor Party's voting strength.

That feature of the convention, however, was overshadowed by a sharp discussion on the foreign affairs platform of the TUC.

After hearing a speech of criticism of Communist policies by Prime Minister Clement Atlee, the convention voted down a resolution which criticized British and American foreign policy. The vote was approximately 3½ million to 2½ million, with the Transport & General Workers Union delegation leading the fight in support of the program of Foreign Minister Bevin—former TGWU secretary—and the Electrical Trades Union spearheading the opposition.

THERE was a considerably greater degree of unity, however, on the question of Franco Spain.

A resolution condemning Franco's policies, and demanding the breaking of economic and diplomatic ties with his government won by a 4-1 margin.

In his speech Atlee described as "one of the tragedies of the world situation" what he described as a deliberate policy by the government of the Soviet Union "to prevent intercourse between the Russian people and the rest of the world."

He told the delegates that the Labor Government is following the mandate of its labor voters on international affairs problems, and denied that his government is following either "selfish or imperialist aims."

E. Foulkes, an Electrical Trades union official, charged on the other hand that relations with the USSR had deteriorated as a "result of Anglo-American domination and the isolation of the Soviet Union." He predicted that the effect of such a policy might lead to "an inevitable war and to the destruction of Britain."

IN adopting the resolution on the 40-hour week, the delegates expressed belief that there is "no industry in which the principle of a 40-hour work-week could not be accepted and implemented." Also demanded were two-week vacations with pay.

One sidelight of the convention was a bitter attack on the attitudes of many demobilized members of the armed forces of the London-in-exile Polish government, who are now living in England. Many of these men had served in the Nazi legions during the war, and were recruited into the Polish army in Italy during the final stages of the conflict or after V-E Day.

FILIPINOS LOOK TO CIO

PHILIPPINE labor unions, still in the swaddling-clothes stage of post-war rebirth, are looking to the CIO as an example of militant unionism and a model for their own organization.

Pres. Cipriano Cid, president of the Congress of Labor Organizations at Manila, said in a letter which arrived here last week that the CIO organization is "patterned more or less exactly after the CIO."

"We follow your line of organization by trade unions," Cid wrote. "We have, as a matter of fact, adopted almost verbatim your constitution and by-laws. The situation and the conditions obtaining here are different from yours, but the principles involved in the organization of labor unions can be the same, we believe."

The CLO was formed in April 1945, less than 60 days after the Japanese had been driven out, and it now embraces 50 unions with a membership of approximately 50,000.

"The CLO is strongly against the men and the groups which collaborated with the Japanese," Cid declared. "Unfortunately, the party supported by the CLO during the last presidential elections, lost.

"Although the new administration has announced a labor program that on its face appears liberal and progressive, to date nothing has been taken to put it into practice. As a matter of fact, our unions are deeply apprehensive of a possible loss of all the gains labor has made since liberation."

Despite the comparative youth of the CLO, however, it has rolled up some successful achievements in fighting for higher pay from big American firms. Allied Labor News reports these recent victories:

The Manila Trading Labor Association, covering Ford employes, won union recognition and a wage hike from 80c to $3.10 a day, in a temporary settlement. A demand for a further wage increase is being arbitrated.

Workers at Intl. Harvester formerly earned from $1.30 to $4.20 a day. New wage scales, gained through a strike, range from $2.75 to $4.70, while office workers got a monthly hike of $15.

The Philippine Communications Workers Union, covering employes at RCA, Press Wireless, Associated Press, raised wages of messengers from $30 to $60 a month, and of operators from $75 to $125 a month.

One of the toughest strikes, which is still in arbitration, was called against the Elizalde Rope Co., whose owner, Joaquin Elizalde, is now Philippine Ambassador to Washington.

Who's Covering Up For U. S. Fascists?

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WHO'S covering up for whom?

That question was being asked with increasing frequency in Washington last week following the sudden dismissal of O. John Rogge from his high post in the Dept. of Justice two days after he had discussed Nazi influences in the United States at a Swarthmore College gathering.

Rogge's report—based on study of the evidence in the never-completed sedition case of 21 alleged American fascists and on interrogation of Nazi bigwigs in Germany following the war's end—has been suppressed by the Dept. of Justice.

Last week lame-duck Sen. Burton K. Wheeler (D. Mont.), the leader of the old isolationist bloc, spent more than an hour with President Truman. Wheeler's name has been closely linked with many of the defendants in the sedition trial, which was called off when the judge died of a sudden heart attack. He is also a close political and personal friend of John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers.

Rogge's sudden dismissal followed by hours the White House conversation between Sen. Wheeler and Pres. Truman.

ROGGE had earlier disclosed that Goering showed interest in Lewis's opposition to the re-election of President Roosevelt in 1940. The former Justice Dept. official had also traced Lewis' connections with the late William R. Davis, international oil operator and sponser of a negotiated peace" plan in which Lewis unsuccessfully sought to interest FDR.

Relieved of any official status, Rogge has announced he will campaign for publication of some of the documents which, as the responsible investigating official in charge, he knows to exist.

In San Francisco, he revealed that his investigations had uncovered information connecting some large American corporations with high Nazi officials.

IN New York—according to a Federated Press dispatch—Rogge told a fraternal group of his conversations early this year with Gerhardt Alois Westrick, a Berlin lawyer. Westrick admitted that in 1940 he had been sent abroad by Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop—now dead by hanging—to build up goodwill for the Nazis in American industrial circles. Rogge said he was told the following by Westrick.

"My most important connection with American business was with Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Co., whose president, was Col. Sosthenes Behn Behn was also a director of Standard Elektrizitats Gesellschaft, which was affiliated with IT&T.

"I also represented the Underwood-Elliott-Fisher Co., which owned a German company by the name of Mercedes Buromaschinen A.G.; the Eastman Kodak Co., which owned the Kodak A.G., the Intl. Milk Corp., which owned a firm in Hamburg, and various others . . .

"Among those I saw in the U. S. were Torkild Rieber of the Texas Co., Eberhard Faber of the Faber Co., James Mooney of General Motors and Edsel and Henry Ford. I first saw Edsel Ford and when I got to New York, I got a phone call from the secretary of Henry Ford asking me to come again to see Henry Ford.

"I paid Mooney a visit and one day he came to visit me in the Waldorf-Astoria, and on his own initiative told me that he and a group of other people had the intention of seeing the President and trying to convince the President that he should insist on normal political relations between the U. S. and Germany. This was after Germany had invaded France, Belgium and Norway."

AT the time of his departure from the Justice Dept., Rooge indicated also that he has been urging a grand jury investigation of Douglas M. Stewart and George T. Eggleston, former publishers of Scribner's Commentary. The magazine, subsidized by a mysterious $39,000, was one of the fiercest adherents of the anti-Roosevelt, anti-interventionist line prior to American entrance into the war.

"To date this investigation has not been authorized," Rogge said. "Why has this investigation not been authorized? Is it because George T. Eggleston is at present employed by the Readers' Digest?"

Rogge charged that Stewart and Eggleston built up a 300,000-name mailing list for circularization of their material. "They got names from Charles A. Lindbergh, Sen. Burton K. Wheeler, Ex-Cong. Hamilton Fish Jr., ex-Sen. Rush D. Holt, ex-Sen. Gerald P. Nye, and the America First Committee," the former Justice official declared.

American fascist forces are coming up for breath again after lying low during the war, and singing their familiar hymn of hate, he warned—"with only the slightest of changes in the lyrics."

"Today . . . the same Americans who sought appeasement . . . of fascism, who applauded Hitler and Mussolini, who proclaimed that the Axis had no designs upon America and that we could live at peace with the dictators, are filling the columns of their weeklies and the ears of their audiences with the refrain: Roosevelt, Communists and international Jewry provoked the peace-loving Japanese into the attack on Pearl Harbor."

IN THE SPOTLIGHT: (Top) O. John Rogge, former assistant to the attorney general, who bared parts of the story of Nazi connections with isolationist or pro-Nazi Americans before this country entered the war. (Center) Atty.-Gen. Tom Clark, who fired Rogge on the grounds that he disclosed confidential government information. (Bottom) Lame-duck Sen. Burton K. Wheeler (D. Mont.) who visited the White House for a long conversation shortly before Rogge was fired.

FDR'S SON TELLS INSIDE STORY OF WAR CONFERENCES

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IF Franklin D. Roosevelt were alive today he probably would again have "roared with laughter," as he does so often in his son's book, over the dismay and concealed rage which "As He Saw It" must have provoked in certain circles here and abroad.

The secret-diplomacy set in this country, who feel that the less the American people know about what goes on behind the scenes the better, must be particularly peeved at Elliott Roosevelt for revealing in his book inside dope on the conferences at Argentina, Casablanca, Quebec, Cairo, Teheran and Yalta.

Elliott's story is based largely on intimate talks with his father whom he served as aide at all but two of the famous conferences, together with his own observation and notes. Anticipating perhaps, the attacks on the book (it has been called indiscreet, amateurish, one-sided and worse things), Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt notes in a forewood that, "Naturally every human being reports the things which he sees and hears and lives through from his own point of view."

Apparently Mrs. Roosevelt does not agree with critics who think that the book will embarrass our foreign policy leaders and muddy up foreign relations, and that therefore Pres. Roosevelt would not have wanted it published, for she says:

"I know that he would have wanted everyone to write their impressions and their ideas, hoping that each would be valuable in achieving the final objective of a better understanding among the people of the world, and the shaping of better tools for keeping the peace."

THE conferences covered in "As He Saw It" are:

1. "Argentia in August 1941, when Pres. Roosevelt arrived off the coast of Newfoundland on the cruiser, Augusta to meet Winston Churchill on the Prince of Wales and drew up the Atlantic Charter statement, which Elliott Roosevelt says now has "a peculiar and bitter historical interest, especially in the light of later violations of its spirit and letter."

Its last point on the abandonment of the use of force calls for all practicable measures "which will lighten for peace-loving peoples the crushing burden of armaments."

2. Casablanca in January 1943, after the invasion of North Africa.

E. R.'s story of this tells some sadly comic inside stuff about Pres. Roosevelt's finally successful effort, which he suspected Churchill of trying to stall, in bringing sulking Gen. DeGaulle and stiff, haughty Giraud together and inducing them to shake hands.

"Like two dogs, the two Frenchmen started almost to circle each other, and then exchanged a brief, reluctant handshake," reports Elliott.

3. Quebec in September, 1943. E. R. was not able to attend this conference because of an air forces assignment, but he discusses it later with his father and reports some of FDR's comments on the "Great Debate," with Churchill over the need for a western front. Churchill at length agreed to approve it but only in principle. "Just so the back door can be left open," FDR told Elliott.

4. Cairo in November 1943. E. R.'s report on this includes some revealing quotes on Pres. Roosevelt's talks with Generalissmo Chiang Kai-shek aimed at keeping China in the war, and arguments with the British Prime Minister over the question of bringing Turkey into the war. Churchill favored it and Roosevelt was opposed, on the basis that it would mean the diversion to Turkey of lend-lease supplies needed for a second front.

HIS father repeatedly criticized Churchill's "archaic, medieval Empire ideas," E. R. reports, and quotes FDR as saying Churchill felt that "we just don't understand the Indians, or the Burmese or the Javanese—or even the Chinese."

He relates how Churchill snorted, tried not to listen, shifted uneasily in his chair and tried to change the conversation when Pres. Roosevelt told the Sultan of Morocco that he should not permit outside interests to obtain concessions which would drain off the resources of the country if he wanted to improve the living standards of his people.

Elliott also observes how blank Gen. Charles Nogues, French resident general at Rabat, looked when Pres. Roosevelt asked him how the lot of the people of Morocco could be improved. Gen. Nogues, says Elliott, "had never troubled to figure out the answers to this question . . . Yet he knew to the penny how much wealth could be exported from the country; to the sou how grievously the Moroccans could be exploited."

Elliott's description of his talk with Madame Chiang Kai-shek at a garden party he attend as replacement for his father will doubtless relieve him of any need in the future to be polite to the lady. She struck him, he says, "as quite a performer" who did on him "as expert a job of flattery and charm as anybody had troubled to exert on me in years."

5. Teheran, December 1943. Some of the liveliest and most colorful of Elliott's stories deal with this Big Three conference to which Stalin came to meet with Roosevelt and Churchill.

The inscription on the sword read: "To the steel-hearted citizens of Stalingrad, a gift from King George VI as a token of the homage of the British people." Stalin took the sword from Churchill, held it a moment, raised it to his lips to kiss the hilt, and swallowed hard, deeply moved, before he spoke his words of acceptance and thanks.

6. Second Cairo Conference, December 1946. After Teheran, Pres. Roosevelt returned to Cairo for further talks with Churchill, President Inonu of Turkey, the Combined Chiefs, American Joint Chiefs and others. When Elliott joined him there, he heard the startling news that Stalin at Teheran had agreed to enter the war against Japan, as soon as the second front started in the west. FDR also told him that it had finally been decided that Turkey should not enter the war.

"In a sense, I guess, it was Winston's last effort to force an allied attack from the South, from the Mediterranean," FDR said.

7. Yalta, February 1944. The furore over Elliott's dog Blaze's priority airplane trip, and the "screams" of hostile congressmen made it seem inadvisable for E. R. to attend the Big Three meeting in the Crimea, and he relies on the impressions of Harry Hopkins and of his sister, Anna, who took his place as aide to their father, for his accounts of Yalta.

"Harry Hopkins is my witness for the statement that the unity of Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt was a firmer and more tangible thing at Yalta than at Teheran," writes Elliott. "And it was evident that Father's role, even more than at earlier conferences, was that of leader. It is not by chance that he sat in the middle, when the pictures were taken."

"Only with the continuing and growing cooperation and understanding among our three countries and among all peace-loving nations can . . . be realized a secure and lasting peace . . ." the Big Three stated at Yalta.

THE concluding chapter of "As He Saw It" warns the American people that "the peace is being lost." Somewhere, sometime since FDR's death, the job of forging a global peace he started well on its way has gone astray, states Elliott Roosevelt. He thinks that our foreign policy has been shrunk down "to the size of the atom bomb" and that the military have been permitted to take over the task of postwar diplomacy.

What can ordinary American citizens do, he asks, "to ensure our Governments return to the path that was charted by Franklin Roosevelt?"

The answer, he says, lies in understanding that, "There is a relationship in an American Democray between their President and the people, which only too rarely is what it should be. We who are sovereign, we who are American citizens must help, if any President is to be a great President.

"If Franklin Roosevelt was a great President, it was—in the main—thanks to the articulated intelligence of the American people during his terms in the White House."

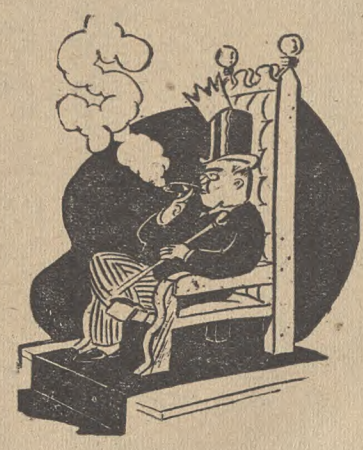
First History Of Labor In Hawaii Issued By ILWU

STRANGE as it may seem, the first history of labor in Hawaii has just been published. It is a 46-page illustrated pamphlet called "Raising Cane," written by Victor Weingarten and published by the regional office of the CIO Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, Terminal Bldg., Honolulu, T. H.



"In the beginning, Hawaii was like it is in the movies," the pamphlet starts, off, and then one day along came King Kamehameha who to protect his crown called together the chief he'd beaten in war and organized a sort of "union of chiefs" called a kingdom.

As time passes, Weingarten writes, "Everybody in Hawaii seemed to organize but the workers. The rulers had their kingdom, the planters had their association, the merchants had their trade groups, but the workers had nothing but misery."

The pamphlet described briefly the slavery, brutality, and starvation wages endured by the plantation workers from early days to modern times, as background to the exciting climax of the story—their organization by the CIO. This began in earnest early in 1944, led by "missionaries" from the ILWU. And a Political Action Committee was formed in July 1944.

Results were immediate and startling. More than 20,000 sugar workers, mill and field hands, were organized in 12 months.

In the political field, 16 out of 21 PAC-endorsed candidates were elected to the Territorial House of Representatives and six out of eight to the Senate. The new legislature kept its campaign promises and passed a "Little Wagner Act" extending covering to agriculture workers.

This made possible the tremendous victories won by the union in a series of NLRB elections, every one of which was won by the ILWU with a total of more than 97% of the votes cast.

Now the union is engaged in a battle to win further advances for the workers, including a 65c minimum cash wage; 40-hour week and a union shop. On Sept. 1, 1946, 25,000 sugar workers dropped their tools in Hawaii's "factories in the fields" and are still on strike, determined to hold out until their demands are met.

Comic Magazine Fights Prejudice

The Challenger, a comic magazine which has made use of "funnies" to fight race and religious prejudice and other forms of fascism out of place in democratic America, takes up the fight for trade unions in the current issue. It is the first of a series to be devoted to stories on the labor movement.

Unions wishing to obtain the Challenger for educational or organizing activities can buy copies in quantity orders at the reduced rate of 6c a copy. The retail price is 10c. Arrangements can also be made for producing special publications for unions which would like to have their own story done in comic picture form.

New PAC Handbook For Speakers

A new "Speakers Handbook of Facts" just issued by the CIO Political Action Committee is full of down-to-earth information backed up with figures on labor's strike record, prices, profits, wages, income and other handy reference material.

A foreword by CIO. Pres. Philip Murray stresses the importance of a continued strong political struggle "so that increasingly the public policies of the nation will be designed to benefit the working people."

Mexico Offers Low Cost Tours

Mexican tourist officials, working with the Confederation of Mexican Workers (CTM), have invited CIO unions to participate in a new program of low-cost tours to Mexico. Plans are being shaped to extend special guide and information services to union visitors, and special entertainment, sightseeing trips and perhaps Workers' University courses will be arranged for guests by Mexican unions.

CIO unions in the southwest are also being invited to hold their conventions in such handy northern cities as Monterrey, Tampico, etc.

BOOKS AND MORE BOOKS — CAREFULLY SELECTED

For all youngsters as for this one, trains and engines have a great fascination. Well chosen books can enrich children's lives and greatly extend their thinking. At first children love stories about themselves and the every-day facts of their own lives. Their first books should be simple in content, illustrations should be clearly outlined in good strong colors. Confused, complicated content and illustrations should be avoided. Humor is important in children's books as in their daily living. A good laugh brings parents and children closer together.

MEET A VERY BUSY CIO GIRL

ELSA GRAVES is a CIO woman worth knowing about. She operates a slow-cool pit at the Carnegie-Illinois steel plant in Chicago and is steward of Local 65, United Steelworkers of America—CIO. She is an active member of the CIO Political Action Committee. She is on the Metropolitan Board of Directors of the Chicago YWCA and was formerly chairman of its Natl. Industrial Council.

Now she has just been appointed chairman of the Natl. Campaign Committee on Labor Cooperation formed to aid the YWCA Round-the-World Reconstruction Fund drive. This drive, to be held in January and February, will raise funds to help women in 30 countries overseas receive the training in citizenship and community leadership needed to fit them for their new responsibilities in the postwar world.

Serving wth Miss Graves on the labor committee are Miss Frances Perry of Passaic, N. J., and Mrs. Sherwood Anderson, YWCA national industrial secretary. Active unionists and YWCA Industrial chairmen will be asked to assist the labor committee in an advisory capacity.

ELSA GRAVES

The campaign is being held in answer to appeals from women abroad to the women of America for help in the techniques of government, vocational guidance and community work.

"This is not a relief program," says Miss Graves. "It is a drive to make American leadership and methods of community organization available to women who, before the war, had remained entirely in the shelter of their own homes."

During the war, women took their places valiantly in the Resistance, she asserts, but "because so many fine male leaders were killed, women must go one step further and serve with equal valor in government, industry and community service."

"For many years the YWCA has exchanged leadership with labor unions and worked with them for improved citizenship and self-help. Now the fruits of our joint experience can be shaped with the women of five continents who have overwhelming new civic responsibilities to meet."

Elsa Graves has a good practical background for the numerous public responsibilities she has taken on. She was a domestic worker until she took her first job in industry as a sausage stuffer in a Chicago meat-packing plant. During the war she got a job in 1942 as a cold-steel recorder at Carnegie-Illinois Steel, and today she is operator of a slow-cool pit.

Outside of her job, Miss Graves says she has little time for anything but YWCA work and PAC activity and her duties as steward of Local 65. The time "left over" is her own.

NEGROES WIN NEW TRIAL

Two recent legal moves involving Negroes, advances at least slightly their fight for equal rights under the law. Counsel for the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has won the right to a new trial for the two Negroes convicted of attempted murder on flimsy charges arising out of the racial conflict last February in Columbia, Tenn. and U. S. Atty. Gen. Tom Clark has stated that a federal grand jury will shortly investigate the lynching of the two Negro couples at Monroe, Ga., last July.

All but two of the 25 defendants in the Columbia case were acquitted by the jury. In granting NAACP counsel the right to seek a new trial for the two convicted Negroes, Circuit Court Judge Joseph Ingram said that he was not satisfied with the evidence on which John McKivens and Robert Gentry were convicted.

The announcement of the grand jury probe of the lynchings in Georgia was made by Atty. Gen. Clark at the opening session of the N. Y. Herald Tribune's current events forum. He revealed that some 2,500 witnesses had been questioned by the FBI since President Truman personally ordered an investigation.

He said he was hopeful that the grand jury "will be able to put the finger on those dastardly conspirators who committed this brutal crime."

The two Negro couples, Mr. and Mrs. George Dorsey and Mr. and Mrs. Roger Malcolm, were lynched by an unmasked mob who took them out of a car driven by a white farmer.

Sprucing Up

WHAT PRICE THAT SMOOTH LOOK?

By HANNA SHERMAN

DON'T look now, but that noise you hear is the price ceilings popping on cosmetics. You'll be paying more for your lipstick the next time you buy it. Maybe you take your make-up on the run with just a dash of powder and lipstick. Or perhaps you go the gamut from foundation cream to mascara. Either way, these changes in price will affect you.

You'd probably like a discussion on modern make-up. In later columns we'll talk about getting the maximum good looks from our cosmetic aids. Right now, I feel that the cost of beauty aids should be of major interest to us who depend on a weekly pay check. So let's look into, "What price that smooth look?"

For example, you can pay from 50c to several dollars for similar face powders and get just as much good looks from each box. The same is true of cleansing creams, skin fresheners, rouges, lipsticks, eye-shadows, mascara and manicure materials. That's because the expensive product is usually a highly advertised brand and the others are little known.

Why pay for a fancy advertising campaign? In most cases the less expensive item is of similar quality. Uncle Sam's standards are pretty strict for all beauty aids whatever their cost.

I HAVE talked to many models and actresses who are among the best groomed of America's working girls. They tell me they are consistent purchasers of low-priced cosmetics. Even though these same models often pose for, and the actresses endorse, the more expensive brands.

Take a tip from our glamour girls and remember their practical suggestions for keeping your smooth look and not going broke.

First of all, investigate cosmetics priced under one dollar. In the expensive brands there may be a greater range of color. But don't let this mislead you. Oftentimes one color differs so little from the other as to defy the eye of an expert. Result consumer confusion.

Any inexpensive cosmetic line that is at all well known will have a sufficient choice of colors to suit your type and satisfy your yen to experiment with different shades.

Secondly, try theatrical cold cream. Or standard USP cold cream instead of the high priced, glossily package brands.

AS for skin fresheners, a dash of cold water or witch hazel (in the large economy size, of course) are probably all you need. Don't forget that superior lipsticks can be bought for twenty-five cents. And eye make-up is available in ten-cent sizes. The dime store is a good place to buy nail polish and other manicure aids.

We American women are envied all over the world for our smooth appearance and well groomed look. And rightly so. Nowhere else have cosmetics and materials for skin care been so widely manufactured and easily available. They're cheap too, if we take advantage of the competition between brands.

"What about my morale?" you say. There's no doubt that those pretty packages have an effect on feminine psychology. All right, spice your life with a perfume you really like and a matching bottle of toilet water.

The money you've saved will more than pay for these. Use the toilet water daily and the perfume for gala occasions. This is the best morale builder I know.

JAMIE FERRET—A SPY FOR CARRUTHERS, OWNER OF THE WARRENTOWN MILLS—VISITS BRAD LINTON'S HOUSE TRYING TO GET INFORMATION...AND IS KICKED OUT. JAMIE THEN REPORTS TO CARRUTHERS...

I COULDA SWORN THEY WAS MEETING IN LINTON'S HOUSE, SIR. ONLY WHEN I COME IN, THEY WAS ALL GONE...AND LINTON BOOTED ME OUT!

IT'S A WONDER THE UNIONS HAVEN'T STOLEN MY MILLS! I'VE GOT DAMNFOOLS WORKING FOR ME!

WHY DON'T YOU HIRE SMART MEN, DADDY DEAR?

THE SMART ONES KNOW ENOUGH TO STICK WITH THEIR DAMN UNION, RUBY. HMMM... NOW IF I KNEW HOW THIS JIM BARRY FELT ABOUT UNIONS. HE'S A SMART ONE—BUT HE'S A STRANGER HERE.

WHO IS THIS JIM BARRY? IS HE AS HANDSOME AS HE'S SMART?

YES, HE'S A HANDSOME DEVIL!

HMMM... YOU'VE GIVEN ME AN IDEA, RUBY YOU MIGHT BE ABLE TO HELP ME...

OF COURSE, DADDY. I JUST LOVE HELPING YOU...

YES, SIR, MR. CARRUTHERS.

YOU CAN BE OF GREAT HELP, RUBY, MY DEAR. I WONDER, NOW, IF YOU CAN'T GET TO KNOW THIS JIM BARRY A LITTLE...

AND FIND OUT WHAT'S HE'S LIKE? I'D LOVE IT, DADDY! BUT I MUST SEE HIM FIRST...I MAY NOT LIKE HIM.

MEANWHILE, IN BRAD LINTON'S HOME...

WE'LL KNOW MORE TOMORROW WHEN I GO DOWN TO THE MILLS FOR A JOB.

IF CARRUTHERS FINDS OUT HOW YOU FEEL ABOUT UNIONS—THERE'S GONNA BE BLOODY TROUBLE!

HO-HUM...YOU DON'T HAVE TO WORRY BRAD... DID I EVER TELL YOU ABOUT THE TIME I WAS—

SOME OTHER TIME, WOODY. WE BETTER GET SOME SLEEP NOW—I'VE GOT A HUNCH WE WON'T BE HAVING MANY PEACEFUL NIGHTS!

Housing Picture

RENT CONTROL EXTENDED, BUT PROFITEERS ON LOOSE

FOR thousands of veterans searching for more adequate dwelling space at reasonable cost, the housing picture this week had at least two bright spots shining through a heavy fog:

1. President Truman, by special proclamation, declared that an emergency exists and ordered import tariffs lifted at once from lumber and lumber products needed for the federal emergency housing program. The action is expected to increase the nation's lumber supply by about a billion board feet a year.

2. OPA, which is rapidly dropping controls in almost all other fields placed 81 more areas under rent control and reinstated control for seven other areas.

"Builders," according to Chairman R. J. Thomas of the CIO Housing Committee, "have been riding the gray train and instead of housing for veterans they have built millionaires' mansions, race tracks, department stores and other unncessary and expensive ornaments.

"Natl. Housing Administrator Wilson Wyatt has tried to stop this but the builders have been black marketing, evading regulations, and the Civilian Production Administration has failed to enforce compliance with regulations," Thomas said.

Thomas, vice-president of the CIO Auto Workers Union, and Director Emil Mazey of the UAW's Veterans Dept., hailed Wyatt's refusal to abandon the veterans housing program and to lift price controls on building materials.

Charging that the program is suffering "not from too much control, but from too little control and too little planning," they declared:

THOMAS's charges that contractors have ignored the low and middle income groups in building houses both for rental and sale were borne out by a Federated Press report on the veterans housing program. FP said the picture "leads to the conclusion that veterans will soon find housing priced beyond their reach if present upward trends continue."

While the price of the median house of all contracted for to date under the program is around $7500, the median house was well above that figure in August and close to $8000 in September, FP learned from Natl. Housing Agency sources.

Median rental per month for the program fell between $55 and $60, with the figure up to $63 for apartments started in August and a little higher for September.

NHA spokesmen warned that the figures used in their breakdown of prices are not to be considered sales prices, since they are estimates of costs at the time builders apply for materials priorities. In most cases builders revise their cost figures upward during construction because of rising materials costs. The figures, then, are all conceded to be lower than the actual cost to the veteran-buyer, although FHA has no overall estimate of the amount of difference.

While all sources concede that veterans principally prefer renting to buying homes, NHA figures show the veterans program has approved priorities for 615,000 sales units and only 193,000 rental units.

Of the rental units, 36% have been caculated at renting for $50 monthly or less. An army survey at separation centers showed more than half the veterans estimated they would be unable to pay over $50 monthly for housing. Yet in August the under $50 rental units were only 18.9% of the total, and in September a further drop to 18.3% was recorded.

Likewise, on houses for sale, the originial figure talked about in the veterans emergency housing program plans was for a median house of around $6500. To date, 36% of the house have been calculated for sale at that price or less. For September, however, the proportion had dropped to 30.1.%

MEANWHILE, CIO Housing Chairman Thomas declared that evidence shows an effort by real estate interests, land holders, mortgage bankers and speculators in the building industry to keep residential housing scarce and expensive.

He urged CIO unions and councils to push this four-point program:

- Get immediate representation on mayors' emergency housing committees and on advisory committees of the nearest construction office of the Civilian Production Administration.
- Constitute union housing committees as local labor-veteran voluntary committees to report violations of building regulations and ceiling prices.
- Protest publicity by mass meetings and delegations the activities of "violators and obstructions."
- Urge poltical candidates to support continued rent control, the veterans housing program and the Wagner General Housing Bill.

PRODUCTIVITY PARLEY LAYS BASIS FOR FACTUAL REPORTS

A conference whose bread and butter effect will probably be far greater than its dust-dry statistical interest was held this week in Washington, D. C. It concerned measurement of the productivity of workers.

The conference was called by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Division of Statistical Standards of the U. S. Bureau of the Budget, and was attended by about 150 individuals from labor, industry, government and private research agencies.

Largely technical discussions concerned productivity concepts and measurements, the current (and inadequate) state of knowledge regarding productivity, research programs and related questions.

RESULTS of the conference, however, will be of general interest, particularly in view of management's current attempt to lay the blame for the next depression on labor's "low productivity".

Management also is using the argument that wages should not rise until productivity is increased.

A sample of this line of propaganda was a speech by F. D. Newbury, a Westinghouse vice-president, before the American Management Assn. early this month. Claiming that wages have increased faster than productivity, Newbury said:

"We are witnessing a hare and tortoise race in which the tortoise, productivity, has little chance. The fact is that labor has been granted a sizable advance payment against future increases in production per man-hour."

Discussion at the government-sponsored conference showed that accurate, comprehensive statistics on productivity are lacking.

Some CIO and AFL representatives sharply criticized newspaper propaganda that labor's "lack of productivity" was holding up production. They pointed out that productivity is influenced by many other factors, including management and plant efficiency, capital investment, flow of materials, labor relations, etc.

IN a paper discussing the limitations of government productivity measurements, Mrs. Katherine Pollak Ellickson, CIO assistant director of research, warned that BLS indexes have been misinterpreted so as to understate increases of productivity.

Mrs. Ellickson called for union participation in all on-the-job studies of productivity, and recommended that the BLS explore the possibilities of compulsory reporting of essential information.

She pointed out that during the war even the then current mechanisms for measuring productivity were disrupted by changes of products, development of new techniques, and use of diflerent materials.

BLS employment and man-hours data are inflated by the inclusion of time paid for but not worked, Mrs. Ellickson pointed out. Since unions have won longer vacations, sick pay, etc., in recent years, a definite downward bias in productivity figures has resulted.

CALLING for expansion of the BLS study and reporting system, Mrs. Ellickson said:

"Instead of simply assuming that the long-time annual trend of a 3% increase in productivity will continue after the war, the BLS should be alert to explore whether this long-time trend may have been accelerated by the wartime developments and the more effective application of enginering knowledge, the simplification of jobs and the use of new methods and materials."

Other CIO research representatives participating in the discussions included: Solomon Barkin, Textile Workers; Herman Bookbinder, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Lyle Cooper, Packinghouse Workers; Seth Levine, CIO Maritime Committee; Rosalind Schulman, Shipbuilding Workers; and Nathan Spero, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The Butchers Will Hear From Them!

If you can't control the meat profiteers through Congress, you can do it at the butcher level. At least that's the campaign that 12 Washington, D. C., organizations, representing 260,000 people, started this week.

Led by the Committee for Consumer Protection, the groups have pledged not to buy meat priced at more than 60c a pound. Thousands of consumers at 33 main shopping districts will be asked to sign the pledge.

IT'S ROUND 2 IN FIGHT FOR FDR'S PROGRAM!

By JACK KROLL

National Director, CIO Political Action Committee

We have just begun to fight. Beginning today—right now—the CIO Political Action Committee will intensify and expand its activity. There will be no halt in our work. There will be no retrenchment. We will go on fighting for Franklin D. Roosevelt's program.

The gains scored by reaction on Tuesday have served only to emphasize the urgency of the political tasks which confront the labor and progressive movement, and to strengthen our determination to get on with the job.

CIO-PAC will continue more actively than before to bring its program to the people, recognizing the new importance of securing the nomination of forthright candidates who will arouse the enthusiasm of the people and to whom we can throw our wholehearted support, we shall emphasize the necessity for day to day activity in wards and precincts, and active participation in pre-primary work and primary elections.

DESPITE temporary setbacks which have been suffered, the election campaign showed that the CIO-PAC and the other groups with which it works can be and will be the decisive political force in our nation. Ours is not a temporary organizaton. We are here to stay as a vital and growing influence carrying forward the Roosevelt tradition and rallying the people of America around a program which can assure them a secure and plentiful America in a world at peace.

We go forward to newer and greater efforts with full confidence in the American people to the triumph of the great cause for which we have just begun to fight.

THE TASK OF TODAY

THE task of today is the unification of all liberal forces for a second-round battle in support of FDR's policies, the Conference of Progressives Continuations Committee said late this week in Washington. The Committee's statement follows:

"Despite the apparent setbacks suffered last Tuesday, the progressive forces of America remain strong. We have our great and growing trade union and farmers organizations. We have our many peoples organizations, including farmers, labor, professional people, businessmen, minorities and veterans, women and youth. We have a number of fighting representatives in the Congress. Our first task is to unify these forces and mobilize them for immediate and effective action.

"The reactionaries in both parties assert that the election results constituted a repudiation by the voters of America of the course which our Government had pursued during the past 14 years. We cannot and will not accept this analysis of Nov. 5.

"Republican headquarters and conservatives generally supported by the screaming headlines of their press claim a landslide victory. But analysis of the returns tells a different story.

"A small shift in Tuesday's votes would have changed the results. That margin is one measure of the task of the progressive forces. These were not affirmative votes cast in support of reaction's program for America. They were negative votes expressing the dissatisfaction of the people with the failure of the 79th Congress, dominated by a reactionary coalition refusing to make any progress in the satisfaction of the vital needs of the people.

"The 80th Congress will provide issues which must be met. By mobilizing and uniting the people to fight on these issues, we can and will expose reaction's real program for America, check its offensive against the people and prepare them for the coming political struggles of 1947 and 1948.

"Therefore, this Continuations Committee, in accordance with its instructions from the first Conference of Progressives, is issuing a call for a Washington Conference to meet in mid-January. To that Conference will be invited all organizations participating in the Chicago Conference as well as all other progressive organizations and individuals that believe in a progressive political program.

"The Conference will work out ways of supporting the progressives in Congress and mobilizing the people for political action to carry out our program. It will blueprint the educational program to train people for political action. It will provide a clearing house through which all organizations can effectively cooperate in political action on a national and community level. It will encourage the day-to-day cooperation of all progressive community organizations.

"In our work we shall carry forward all that is best in the progressive movement, working as an independent non-partisan group, fighting for the ideals of Franklin D. Roosevelt. We will take further steps towards our goal of mobilizing the most effective liberal-progressive coalition ever brought together in the history of our country."

TAKING STOCK OF NOV. 5

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE New Deal which Franklin D. Roosevelt brought to the American people in the dark depression days of 1932, was buried last week in an avalanche of Republican votes.

It was a stunning defeat for American labor and liberals—a fact made clear as the results poured in from both industrial and rural areas, east and west.

A few bright spots stand out like early crocuses in a spring snow, but they scarcely dim the luster of reaction's landslide triumph at the polls on November 5.

The GOP victory, however, does not mean the demise of labor's political activities nor of the CIO Political Action Committee.

In Washington, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey commented: "Labor's political action is here to stay. This means only that we shall have to work all the harder."

Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, echoed the words of FDR: "We have just begun to fight." And he made it clear that American workers will not fold up under the defeat.

"There will be no halt in our work," Kroll said. "There will be no retrenchment. We will go on fighting for Franklin D. Roosevelt's program."

"The gains scored by reaction on Tuesday have served only to emphasize the urgency of the political tasks which confront the labor and progressive movement and to strengthen our determination to get on with the job."

There were few other comments from CIO leaders as they studied the returns. In Detroit, however, Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the UAW-CIO declared: ". . . This election is not the end of the fight to achieve our goals for the American people. That fight will go in the halls of Congress; it will be pressed in the speeches of our leaders; it will be chanted on our picket lines and in the protestations of the little people in a thousand communities."

That fight, however, is apt to be defensive, aimed at preservation of the rights won by labor and the people during the Roosevelt era.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S economic bill of rights—with its promise of expanded social security, of health insurance and government housing, of full employment and strengthened civil liberities — will have hardly the chance of a snow ball in a blast furnace during the 80th Congress.

If the Republican leaders who now control the Congressional machinery may be believed on the basis of their records and their speeches, their principal interest will be devoted to hacking away the gains of organized labor.

The Case Bill, amendments to the Wagner Act, restrictions on the Wage-Hour law — all these are prospects which will face American workers in the next few months.

More immediately, the GOP victory is apt to strengthen the resistance of corporation executives to demands for wage increases to offset the cost of living.

Anti-labor bills came periously close to passage in the last session of Congress and the prospects of their becoming law after the first of the year have increased tremendously as a result of the voting on Tuesday. Many of the men who fought most energetically have lost their Congressional seats.

In their place are Republicans pleged to fighting "communism" —a polite way of expressing their determination to strip down labor legislation and other New Deal measures.

TO OFFSET that threat, labor will have to fight unitedly to convince even Republican tories that the nation's welfare demands strong unionism and a high standard of living for workers, farmers and small businessmen.

If that argument is successful, if labor shows its united determination to resist attacks on its rights, and if Republican strategists feel that more friendly tactics may bring them the payoff in the 1948 presidential elections—then the fury of the assault on Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal may be tempered with caution.

Labor Action Pays Off

The American Labor Party, state arm of the CIO-PAC to which most CIO unions are affiliated, greatly increased its vote over the last off-year election, as the Democratic vote took a big drop.

Herbert Lehman received 424,393 ALP votes for Senator, as compared with an ALP state vote of about 400,000 in 1942. Ten N. Y. City Congressmen owed their election to the ALP vote, and two ALP designees will sit in the state legislature.

The Liberal Party, a breakaway from the ALP, registered 179,000 votes for Lehman and 175,000 for Mead.

LIBERAL FORCES FACE STIFF FIGHT IN CONGRESS

While many of the outstanding liberals in Congress went down to defeat, a number retained their places, though their influence will be far weaker than during the 79th Congress.

For the past two years the Congressional progressive bloc was hampered by the existence of a Republican-southern Democratic poll tax alignment. With the GOP now in full control of both House and Senate, it may be possible for the progressives—in almost every case members of the Democratic party—to speak and act more freely without the interference of majority-party discipline.

IN the House a number of liberals—most of them from N. Y. City, Chicago and Los Angeles—withstood the conservative landslide.

Among them are Rep. Vito Marcantonio (D. ALP N. Y.), one of the most vigorous of the progressives, whose record in the last session was one of untiring activity against anti-labor proposals, and for enactment of an FEPC bill. Adam Clayton Powell (D. ALP N. Y.), one of the two Negroes in Congress, also won re-election with labor support.

Rep. Adolph Sabath (D. Ill.), a veteran New Dealer who was practically the sole progressive on the powerful Rules Committee, also won re-election. So did Rep. Thomas Lane (D. Mass.) who has consistently voted with labor. Rep. Louis Ludlow (D. Ind.), a veteran sincere liberal, retained his seat. Rep. Helen Gahagen Douglas (D. Calif.), a first-termer from Los Angeles who compiled a magnificent record in two years, also won re-election, as did Rep. Frank Havenner (D. Calif.) whose district includes the San Francisco waterfront.

Several others with good progressive and labor records also came through the Republican storm: Kelley (Pa.), Sadowski and Lesinski (Mich.), Forand and Fogarty (R. I.), Jackson (Wash.), Huber and Feighan (O.), Kefauver (Tenn.), former majority leader McCormack (Mass.), Mansfield (Mont.), Monroney (Okla.); several Californians—Hollifield, Izac, King, Miller and Shepard, and Dawson, O'Brien, Gorski, Gordon and Price of Illinois.

Two new progressives were elected Tuesday. One is John Blatnik, a former Army captain, who gained the 8th District seat in Minnesota with solid Democratic-Farm-Labor support, and H. D. Donohue, who had CIO-PAC support in copping the election in Massachusetts' 4th District.

But the list is small compared to the reactionary gains. Gone are such liberal stalwarts as Voorhis and Outland (Cal.), DeLacy, Coffee and Savage (Wash.); Hook (Mich.); Traynor (Del.); Biemiller (Wis.); Bradley (Pa.); Neely (W. Va.); Geelan and Koppleman (Conn.) and a batch of others.

Mrs. Helen Mankin, who came to the House by winning an Atlanta special election in 1945, failed to get the Democratic nomination on county unit votes, though rolling up a popular majority in the primary; and machine shenanigans prevented her election last Tuesday. She was a leading exponent of improved race relations.

Two outstanding women Representatives went down to defeat. Mrs. Emily Taft Douglas (D. Ill.) failed to buck the Republican tide in that mid-west state.

THE progressive casualty rate was equally severe in the Senate. Swept out of office were Sen. Joseph Guffey (D. Pa.), an early New Dealer; Abe Murdock (Utah); venerable James Tunnell (Del.), who waged a splendid battle for labor's rights and for OPA in the 79th Congress; James Mead (N. Y.) who lost his seat while unsuccessfully bidding for the New York governorship; Hugh Mitchell, a liberal Washingtonian appointed to fill a vacancy two years ago, and David Walsh of Massachusetts, whose voting had been pro-labor throughout his 24 years in office.

In West Virginia, Harvey Kilgore—sponsor of many forward-looking bills and implacable foe of monopoly control of the economy, squeezed into a thin victory despite a last-minute knifing job by Republican-minded John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers.

In Vermont, PAC-supported Ralph Flanders, a liberal businessman, won a Republican seat to the Senate, and in Rhode Island, J. Howard McGrath, former solicitor-general running with PAC endorsement, won a Senate seat.

Several Senate liberals remain in office, however, among them many of the people's most able spokesmen on Capitol Hill.

It is a group that includes James Murray (D. Mont.), Claude Pepper (D. Fla.), Lister Hill (D. Ala.), Elbert Thomas D. Utah), Glen Taylor (D. Ida.), Warren Magnuson (D. Wash.) and Robert Wagner (D. N. Y.) Together with Kilgore and Dennis Chavez (D. N. M.), they form the nucleus of the liberal forces in the upper house.

UNITED AGAINST REACTION!

THE November elections changed the complexion of Congress, but even the Republican landslide cannot change facts.

One fact is incontrovertible. On hand is a big backlog of social and economic problems which must be dealt with honestly and without fear if the U. S. is to maintain a government which responds to the people's needs.

FACT: We are now riding an economic boom. We will eventually, as economists of all shades of opinion have predicted, face an economic bust. We can seek to halt the inflationary wave now, and stabilize our economy; or we can ride down the coaster of deflation straight into depression of world-shaking magnitude.

FACT: Labor unions have contributed mightily to the economic prosperity of this nation. Higher wages, reflected in higher purchasing power, have kept the wheels of industry turning. Restrictions on unionism, chiselling on the Wagner Act, a "tough" attitude towards workers—all these serve only to weaken labor at the collective bargaining table. That means lower wages, less purchasing power, less demand, less output, a lowered standard of living.

FACT: Millions of Americans were turned down by the draft because of poor health directly attributable to poor medical care. Reason: The high cost of medical care. A national program is an urgent necessity to maintain American health standards and improve the national welfare.

FACT: Millions of elderly persons, of invalids and blind, are existing on a meager pittance from social security. Our society should take decent care of those who have finished their working careers, or who have been prevented, through no fault of their own, from maintaining themselves.

FACT: Our tax program has borne down heavily on the low income families, has been a boon to the wealthy and to the big corporations. In the name of justice and equality, it needs improvement.

The Republican majority in Congress will do precious little to improve our social welfare program.

LABOR's task is clear. CIO will fight for the Economic Bill of Rights of President Roosevelt, as it has done in the past. Eventually it will be adopted, if not at this Congress then in the not-too-distant future.

Labor will not give up the struggle; nor will it permit a Republican Congress to believe that it has a "divine right" to meet our great national problems with a do-nothing attitude. American workers know that our legislation must keep abreast of the great industrial, economic and social changes of our era.

UNITE AGAINST REACTION

ANY KID can tell you there's only one thing to do when a bully thinks he has you down and threatens to kick you in the face. That's to stand up and really fight.

That is the natural reaction of CIO members and other progressives to the tory Republican sweep in the last elections.

"We have just begun to fight," said Director Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee immediately after the elections. "Beginning today—right now—the CIO-PAC will intensify and expand its activity."

THE AMERICAN people did not vote for high prices and rents, for labor-baiting and union-busting, for coddling the rich and grinding the poor, for imperialist foreign policies, and for the Hooverism that can only end in depression.

Reaction was careful to conceal the real character of its program, to raise false issues, and to concentrate on creating revulsion against the Democrats more than support for its own shady policies.

It has been truly said that the results were more a defeat for the Democrats than they were a victory for the Republicans; and that the Democratic Party virtually knocked itself out.

Roosevelt brought his party its greatest majorities, because his vigorous leadership identified it in the public mind with liberalism and progress, with the interests of the common people against the economic royalists.

But since Roosevelt's death, there have been too many retreats from his domestic and foreign policies, too much appeasement of reaction, too many attempts to make the Democrats a Tweedledum to the Republicans' Tweedledee.

When confronted with such a Tweedledum-Tweedledee tendency, conservatives always vote for the older-established reactionary firm, progressives tend to become disillusioned or apathetic, while many middle-of-the-roaders feel they might just as well try Tweedledee as a change from Tweedledum.

THE CHIEF fight for FDR's policies and against reaction had therefore to be carried by the CIO-PAC and the other progressive groups working with it.

In New York, for instance, the American Labor Party vote was greatly increased, despite the big drop in Democratic votes.

The chief hope for turning the tide against reaction in the future, therefore, rests with the unity of all progressive forces, as planned by the Conference of Progressives.

Only a militant and united opposition, imbued with the spirit of FDR, can prevail over the tories who rode in on Democratic division, disillusionment and defeatism.

THE LAST Congress was ruled by a reactionary majority of tory Republicans and polltax Democrats. The elections have simply increased this majority.

The blockade against progressive social legislation is likely to be tightened. The club of union-busting laws is being shaken against labor. Tax laws are likely increasingly to relieve the greedy at the expense of the needy. And the increased power of the profiteers points surely to an early depression.

It is significant that even Wall Street is worried over its victory and the economic results. Speculators cashed in only moderately on the Republican sweep, and stocks slumped sharply the day after elections, as fears of approaching depression increased.

The CIO, which warned against these dangers, will certainly not lie down and let reaction walk over it.

It will fight back by building the strength of its unions, by demanding increased wages and other protections, by increasing its legislative activities, and by organizing the political unity of all progressives in every ward and precinct to defeat reaction in all future elections.

BY LEN DE CAUX

HENRY S. DUBB prided himself on being a practical man. His favorite expression was, "What's in it for me—in dollars and cents?"

He had the elections all figured out—in dollars and cents for himself.

"I'm voting Republican for good cash reasons," he said, "and to hell with the PAC.

"First I save a dollar by not contributing to PAC. Then I win a $10 bet if the Republicans take both the Senate and the House.

"I've got a couple of hundred bucks in company stock. It's bound to go up when the GOP wins, netting me maybe 20 bucks.

"That'll put me about $31 ahead, aside from what I'll save in taxes. So you go peddle your PAC propaganda some place else."

★ ★ ★

RUNNING into Henry after elections, I expected to find him jubilant, but his face was long.

"Thought I'd find you counting your ill-gotten gains," I said. "You won your bet, didn't you and . . ."

"Sure, sure," he interrupted, "but d'you know what my landlord just told me? He said, now we've won, he's going to raise my rent $15, soon as Congress lifts rent controls."

"But that still ought to leave you $16 ahead—if only for a month."

"Like hell," Henry grumbled. "My wife says she's got to have $10 a week more housekeeping money, to pay Republican prices."

"But how about your stock?"

"It went down, along with the rest of the market, right after elections. Those Wall Streeters don't seem to have any confidence even in their own party."

"By the way," I said, to change the unpleasant subject, "what does your middle initial S. stand for?"

"Sucker, I guess," Henry answered morosely.

★ ★ ★

NOT MANY voters figure the way Henry did. They are moved by personal and local considerations, by prejudices and slogans, and by many other influences which it will take weeks for the election experts to figure out.

But several major factors seem to stand out in the Republican sweep.

His firing of Henry Wallace alienated many Negro voters, among others. And various departures from Roosevelt's domestic and foreign policies, to appease an anticipated conservative trend, served only as grist to the Republican mills.

THE REPUBLICAN leaders played chiefly on weariness with Democratic rule and desire for change—trying to conceal the fact that they had themselves controlled Congress, in alliance with the polltax Democrats, and were thus responsible for most of the troubles of which people were weary.

To big business the GOP offered much—lower taxes, higher prices, unlimited profits, curbing of unions, less social legislation—and the big-business press went to town for it.

But to the common people, the Republican brasshats offered only the illusory hope of better times if all government controls were lifted and free rein given to profiteers.

They counted for success chiefly on apathy among progressive voters, and on Democratic disillusionment and division.

THE ELECTIONS have not changed the control of Congress in any real sense. They have simply increased the reactionary majority of tory Republicans and polltax Democrats.

But, in so doing, they have increased the danger of inflation and another Hoover depression, of union-busting legislation, and of a blockade against all bills for the security and welfare of the masses of the people.

The elections have demonstrated the validity of PAC claims that the only way to fight reaction is through vigorously progressive leadership such as Roosevelt gave, not through pussyfooting and appeasement.

The CIO did much to unite and mobilize progressive voters. The chief lesson of the elections is that it will have to do much more hereafter. In this it will be aided by the revulsion which will inevitably set in against the whip-cracking of triumphant tory reaction.

From his office in Atlanta, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee keeps in touch with his eight field assistants and 12 state directors throughout the South. Bittner, who is vice-president of the CIO Steelworkers, directs the work of 300 organizers. When asked how long Operation Dixie will last, he tells reporters, "We'll keep right on working until we have organized the unorganized."

John Brownlee (Right) reports CIO election victories to Allan L. Swim, Committee director of public relations, in preparation for issuance of a news release. Brownlee, a CIO Steelworkers representative, has handled more National Labor Relations Board cases than any man not connected with the board. Swim is a former Scripps-Howard reporter and editor.

The CIO Organizing Committee is seeking to advance the living standard of workers through the South, such as this one shown at his job in a Georgia textile plant. Every week the committee reports substantial CIO victories showing that the goal of organizing the unorganized Southern workers is being translated into reality.

TWO WINS A DAY IN DIXIE

GREEN organizers who joined the "fight for economic justice" last May and June are now becoming seasoned field campaigners in CIO's Southern Organizing Drive.

Victories are now averaging almost two a day. A total of 235 elections have been won and only 38 lost since the drive started more than five months ago, the committee reported this week. The committee also has 206 petitions for certification pending before the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Obstacles that at one time appeared insurmountable have been overcome. Operation Dixie is now in its sixth month and is moving ahead under full steam.

Carpenters and painters were still converting an old building into campaign headquarters early last June when Van A. Bittner moved to Atlanta to direct the largest, most highly concentrated membership drive ever undertaken by the CIO.

SHERMAN Dalrymple, former president of the CIO Rubber Workers, and Richard Bauer, of the national CIO staff, had the financial portion of the campaign team nearly set up when Bittner arrived. Dalrymple is secretary-treasurer of the CIO Organizing Committee. Bauer is his assistant.

Allan L. Swim, former Scripps-Howard writer and director of public relations for the Committee, had his part of the organization functioning by early June.

John Brownlee, CIO Steelworkers expert on NLRB procedure, was then assigned to the Committee to handle its NLRB cases.

Meanwhile, the campaign went into low gear. Bittner's assistants moved throughout the South, directing the drive in the field. Twelve state directors mapped out their plans, set up offices and put organizers to work.

MUCH detail work had to be done before the men in the field could function efficiently. Bookkeeping forms, pay vouchers, pamphlets and "instruction" books had to be printed—and there was an acute paper shortage. Office space throughout the South had to be secured—and there was an acute shortage of office building space.

Desks, typewriters, mimeographs and adding machines had to be purchased—and there was an acute shortage of office equipment. But by the end of July the campaign shifted into second gear.

During August the loose ends of the program were tied together and in early September the drive shifted into high. About 300 full-time organizers are now signing up members throughout Dixie.

OPPONENTS of the CIO have become increasingly active in recent weeks.

Nineteen organizers and union leaders were assaulted during the first four months of the campaign. Several of them were threatened with death unless they "got the hell out of town." Two were victims of ambush in which they were shot at and their car set on fire.

Only a few employers are fighting the CIO in the open as they did in the days before the Wagner Act was passed. Many are using "outside" help.

Two of their principal weapons are "The Militant Truth" and "The Trumpet," tabloid-size newspapers which attempt to sell workers the idea that the CIO is an un-Christian, communistic organization.

Sherman Patterson's "Truth" and "Parson Jack" Johnston's "Trumpet" operate largely in the eastern portion of the campaign territory. Christian-American, Inc., operated by Vance Muse and Lewis Valentine Unrey, lead the anti-CIO campaign in the Western part of the region.

Several "independent" organizations of business men and farmers have been created to fight the CIO. The anti-union groups are of questionable value to their financial backers, however.

They slow down the CIO campaign in some towns but there is mounting evidence that in other places they aid rather than hinder the progress of the drive.

MINISTERS, various liberal organizations and independent business men who have learned what unionism means to them are effectively counteracting the work of those fighting the CIO.

"The South is suffering from no ills that cannot be cured if the region is put in balance economically with the rest of the nation," Director Bittner says.

"Our campaign to organize the South is just the beginning of the workers' fight for economic justice. We are concentrating all our efforts on signing up new members. Then will come the negotiating of contracts providing higher pay and better working conditions.

"We are convinced that once the workers of the South have obtained economic freedom, political freedom and the other freedom will follow automatically.

"Our organizers know what we are fighting for because 75% of them are Southerners and 85% of them are war veterans."

THE CIO—through pamphlets, leaflets, radio and newspapers—is telling the workers of Dixie, a simple story:

"There is only one reason that your pay and working conditions are not as good as those enjoyed by workers throughout the rest of the nation. That reason will disappear when the South has a strong CIO movement."

Southern workers are listening attentively to this story—and they're signing CIO membership cards.

2,000 teachers, members of UPW-CIO, march on the State Capitol in Albany, New York demanding $1,000 annual salary increases and more state aid to New York schools. The teacher shortage, due to low salaries, has left 20,000 New York kids with no one to teach them, has forced 40,000 more to double up, two to a seat.

R-R-R GOING C-I-O

By DON MURRAY

WHETHER or not our kids —and our returning veterans—actually get that "good education" America has promised them depends now on whether the nation's teachers are able to win their battle for decent pay and better conditions of work. CIO's United Public Workers is leading the teachers' fight.

The crisis in America's schools is a real one. There are now over 60,000 vacant teaching jobs in elementary and high schools. Another 109,000 jobs are filled by teachers not qualified for the work. Reason: low pay.

Half of U. S. teaching jobs pay $30 a week or less.

Result: six million American kids are being taught by substandard teachers, or crowded into classes already too large, or just have no teachers at all. 350,000 teachers have left their profession during the last 5 years.

BUT thousands of teachers—in New York, in Pennsylvania, in California and Michigan, in Georgia and Alabama—are not leaving their classrooms. They are joining the CIO instead.

The New York Teachers Union, affiliated with the United Public Workers, recently led a march of 2,000 teachers on the New York State Capital as part of their drive for $1000 annual increases. In Philadelphia, UPW teachers, demanding a $500 raise, are picketing the Board of Education.

In Jefferson County Alabama, the union has won equalization of pay for teachers in the Negro schools through court action, and how is fighting to have the court decision fully enforced.

Other battles are in progress and thousands of teachers for the first time are looking to union organization to solve their problems. In a message to CIO teachers, Pres. Philip Murray recently said:

"Workers everywhere know well that a school system can be only as good as the people in it. The CIO supports wholeheartedly your campaign and the efforts of teachers throughout the country to win adequate compensation. We support you both in your capacity as a vital section of the working population and as the custodians of education for all the people."

Philadelphia teachers, supported by other CIO unions, picket the Board of Education to force hearing on salary demands.

British Probe Voted

PRESS LORDS ON PAN

By JOHN BRANDON
Allied Labor News

THE British House of Commons, overriding Tory objections has decided to investigate whether "freedom of the press" can thrive in the hands of monopoly-minded press lords. Three of these newspaper barons control chains of anti-labor newspapers read by 23 million of Britian's 48 million people.

The House of Commons voted 271 to 157 in favor of the investigation, which will be conducted by a Royal Commission.

The probe was originally proposed by the Natl. Union of Journalists, which charges that the nation's press is being gobbled up by the three powerful chains. Far from reflecting the observations of reporters on the spot, copy and editorial comment are fed to the papers from a central office under the direction of a millionaire proprietor, the NUJ contends.

The Kemsley group of papers is regarded by the union as the biggest offender. Lord Kemsley owns 17 papers in all parts of the country, with a combined readership of 10 million.

Lord Beaverbrook, publisher of one of London's most virulent anti-labor papers, the Daily Express, reaches seven million readers through his chain and the Rothermere group is close behind with a circulation of six million.

THE House of Commons' decision to probe the press will turn the public spotlight on the following facts: (1) ownership, control and financing of national and provincial newspapers; (2) the extent to which the growth of powerful newspaper chains is creating a monopoly; (3) the ability of independent papers to withstand competition from the big combines; (4) the influence of financial and advertising interests on presentation and suppression of news; (5) distortion of essential facts in news presentation.

Haydn Davies, one of 23 NUJ members in the House of Commons, backed up the union's charges by pointing out that since 1921 the big newspaper networks have bought out small publishers. The number of papers in London has fallen from 18 to 12 and in the provinces from 130 to 83.

TO PERON—'NO, THANKS'

DICTATOR JUAN PERON of Argentina will not be able to use a CIO delegation to whitewash his fascist regime, it was made clear last week by Jacob Potofsky, head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee.

Potofsky made public a reply from CIO President Murray to the Argentine Ambassador in Washington, declining an invitation from the South American country to send four union representatives there to inspect Argentine labor organizations.

"The CIO adheres strictly to its policy of accepting invitations to visit foreign countries only through the respective national trade union centers," Murray wired to Ambassador Oscar Ivanissevich. "The CIO must therefore decline the invitation extended our organization by the Argentine government to send a delegation to Argentina as guests of the government."

POTOFSKY made clear that the Latin-American Committee of CIO has no illusions about the Peron regime nor about the sightseeing tour which the CIO representatives had been offered.

Declaring that "the Peron regime is a corporate state along Nazi lines," Potofsky added:

"The leopard has not changed its spots. Nazi and Fascist methods are still present in Argentina and there is no democratic functioning in labor circles of that country today.

"Even the alleged labor support that President Juan Peron had claimed up to his election has been lost.

"There is no freedom in that country for labor to get properly organized and working."

He added that the so-called inspection visit would be little more than a "Cook's tour for the political advantage of the Peron regime."

At the same time Potofsky charged that the AFL, in accepting the invitation, had been guilty of "hasty judgment." It was recalled that during the ILO conference in Mexico City last spring, the AFL spokesmen had been vehement in their criticism of Peron and his alleged government-dominated unions.

Light For All

Next time you drop into the Central Labor College library in Tokyo, you'll be able to read The CIO NEWS.

Along with several other American labor publications, the official CIO organ is now available in the library, whose collection of 55,000 labor volumes has just been opened to the public.

LABOR'S WORLD

TRADE UNIONS in strife-torn Trieste will become affiliated with the World Federation of Trade Unions on Jan. 1.

After meeting with WFTU representatives, both Italian and Yugoslav labor leaders in the northern Adriatic city agreed to set up an eight-man committee which will act as temporary bargaining agent for all unionized workers in the area. The committee includes leaders of the Trieste unions as well as the Italian General Confederation of Labor and the Yugoslav United Trade Unions.

THE NEW Brazilian Federation of Labor (CTB) was born in October at a congress in Rio de Janeiro of 2,400 delegates from every section of the country.

Affiliated with the Latin-American Federation of Labor (CTAL), the new organization is an outgrowth of the Movement for Labor Unification which developed shortly after long-standing barriers to democratic unionism were lifted in Brazil early last year.

"The provisional leadership of the CTB undertakes to work with the CTAL to defend labor unity in all the world, to work for peace and for democracy, and for better conditions of life for all," a post-convention statement declared.

THREE PAMPHLETS describing how American unions function have just been released by the Labor Division of military government in Japan. Written in Japanese, they are designed to help leaders of the country's zooming young labor organizations develop their own unions.

The pamphlets were prepared by 1st Lt. Richard Deverall, one-time education director of the Auto Workers.

AN APPEAL for "horses for Poland"—one of that war-torn country's greatest needs—has been addressed to Americans by The Rebuilders of Poland Assn., 2635 Barlum Tower, Detroit 26.

By arrangement with UNRRA, American horses can be purchased in the U. S. for $100 and shipped to the port of Gdynia. The Polish Ministry of Agriculture then transports the horses to the individual named by the American donor.

A somewhat similar program for cattle has been initiated by the Church of the Brethren, which has already shipped in large quantities of animals to Poland's devastated farms.

Rumors that heifers thus sent to Poland were being seized by the Soviet Army have been denied by Ralph Smeltzer of the Brethren Service Committee and by two leading UNRRA officials in Poland.

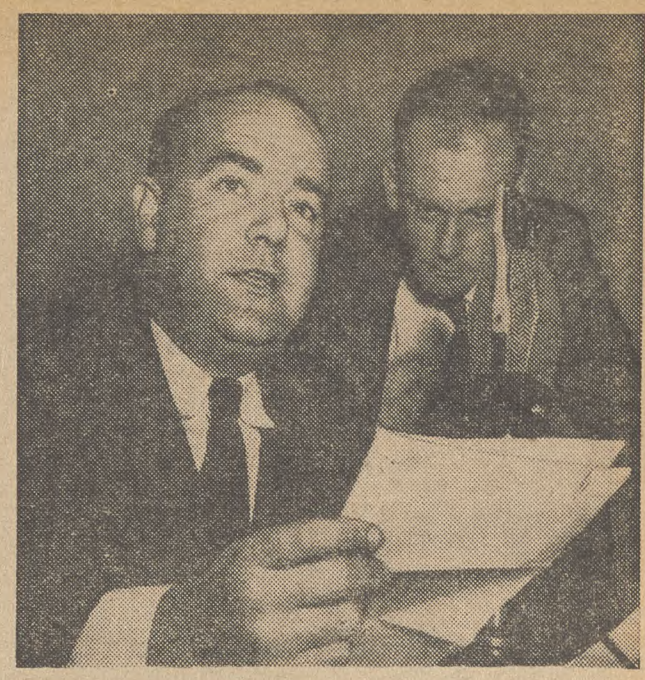
On the contrary, Polish citizens repatriated to their homeland from the USSR had brought with them, up to April of this year, some 52,000 horses, 121,000 cows, 36,000 hogs and 55,000 sheep and goats, the officials said.

FUNDS TO FIGHT DEPORTATION ASKED

The committee for the defense of Humberton Silex, representative of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, against unjust deportation appealed for additional funds this week.

The committee points out that the funds so far received cannot cover legal fees necessary in the battle for Silex whose half-hour visit into Mexico was interpreted by the Dept. of Justice as a new entry into the country.

The Texas CIO Council at its convention last month urged full support of the committee. Funds should be sent to Silex Defense Committee, P. O. Box 1225, El Paso, Tex.



SIDNEY ROGER AND JIM SAN JULE
"Highly Accurate and Broadly in the Public Interest"

Broadly Speaking For CIO

By MORRIS WATSON

AT 6:15 five nights a week Sidney Roger takes the mike at KYA in San Francisco for the CIO.

Up jumps the station's Hooper rating and the CIO Radio Dept. directed by Jim San Jule, has a job on its hands replying to a flood of mail.

So popular has the program become throughout Northern California that individuals, business men and professional persons as well as those of organized labor, are sending in contributions to sustain a Sunday morning Sidney Roger broadcast over KGO, Northern California ABC outlet.

SIDNEY Roger has for years been one of the best known news commentators in the entire West. He was commercially sponsored before being engaged by the CIO and during the war he was a featured OWI shortwave commentator.

A Filipino guerrilla commander once wrote him: "Your broadcasts are worth more than a sixth of my entire fighting forces."

Roger is delighted with the CIO sponsorship which allows him complete freedom for frank discussion of world, national, state and community events and problems. He need not fear trampling the toes of any special interests, for the CIO interests are those of the community all the way down the line.

He can tell the truth about foreign policy, the wrecking of OPA, the withholding of manufactured goods or anything else and, unlike so many commercially-sponsored commentators, he doesn't have to engage in any doubletalk to salve his concience.

HIS listeners are by no means confined to members of the CIO. On a number of issues he has set middle-class people into motion. An example of this was a citizen of Oakland who, after listening to a Sidney Roger broadcast on Franco Spain, went out and rounded up 72 signatures to a petition demanding that our state department break off relations with Franco.

Though the program is conducted by the CIO, with the support of 51 local CIO unions of Northern California, primarily in the public interest, it has helped to win CIO elections and helped to win the economic demands of CIO workers.

JIM San Jule, director of the CIO Radio Dept., and Roger make a team that results in ever-widening popular support for the program. San Jule was chief of OWI's Free Asia Intelligence Section during the war and was once state CIO legislative director. He is a newspaperman.

The department handles research, field contact for news tips, promotion, public relations, fund raising and the important job, also, of convincing CIO unions of the value of good use of radio in the peoples' interests.

The responsible officers of CIO in Northern California are agreed that the phenomenal success of the program is due to the fact that it is professionally produced, has a high reputation for accuracy and is always broadly in the public interest rather than being just narrow CIO shop talk.

UNION ANSWER TO HOUSING

By FRED ROSS and MARIAN HILLE

FOR 19 years the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has been demonstrating what unions can do to solve the housing crisis.

It was in 1929 that ACW, faced with a shortage of homes for its members at reasonable rents and armed with the belief that workers should have better housing, went in for cooperative housing.

Its solution to the problems facing its members and other trade unionists were apartments, one group for 700 families in the Bronx and another on the East Side for 250 families.

The cooperative apartments are proof that workers can have decent homes at moderate rents. Children have grown up in the apartment developments, met their fiances and fiancees—as the case may be—and now with their families are living there.

THE moving rate has been very small—about 1.5% over a period of 19 years, except during the depression when it rose to about 3% a year, despite the efforts of the cooperatives to help during the trying period.

During the war a special fund was raised in the Bronx development which paid half the rent of all fathers drafted, with the result that not a single home was broken up.

Other contributions of the Bronx apartment families to the war effort were victory gardens and the largest canning group under the Red Cross in New York City.

THE canning group meets every Wednesday night and serves also as a place where any differences that may develop among the families are ironed out in a friendly atmosphere as the women go about their work.

When the picture at the right center was snapped one of the women said she comes to the canning group because she likes to meet the other women every week. She added:

"Our children like it and our husbands like it and we make better canned fruit than you can buy. It's a wonderful feeling seeing the canned fruit standing on the pantry shelves."

If the women have any canning problems they call for the Red Cross which assists them, just as it did during the war when the group contributed its products to the supply of canned fruit for the families of America's partners in arms. The group still continues to aid solution of the problem of world food shortages.

COMMUNITY life looms large in the co-op apartments stimulated by forums and socials, by summer day camps and a nursery.

One hundred thousands dollars has been set aside for a community center which will serve not only the members of the Bronx cooperative but the entire neighborhood, which is also proud of having its own credit union which has enrolled 550 of its 700 members.

This cooperative also operates its electrical plant which was purchased in 1937 for $70,000 and which saved the families $12,000 a year in electric light bills. Operation had to be suspended during the war but electricity is purchased wholesale at considerable saving.

THE power plant had an influence beyond the apartment community, serving as a yardstick on N. Y. electric rates. N. Y. City is unable to obtain legal permission to operate its own light plant because such legislation is opposed hysterically by the Republican-dominated N. Y. State legislature.

amily in the ACW cooperative apartment in the t Miller, a member of Cutter Local 4, ACW, has is apartment 18 years. Here the Millers have raised their children. In addition to his son shown in the picture, the Millers have a daughter, who is a student at Hunter College.

sday night meetings of the canning group at the rative apartments serve not only a useful but also ose. During the war the canning was done for the members and for families of our Allies under the supervision of the American Red Cross. Any differences that develop along the families are also settled in this friendly atmosphere.

partments have a cooperative store where the same osphere prevails as in the Wednesday night canning group. An additional incentive to purchase at the store are the refunds that are returned periodically.

CIO RENEWS BATTLE FOR MORE HOMES

RENT CONTROL and the government's emergency housing program are heading into stormy weather as an aftermath of the Republican victory at the polls.

Appearing before the American Legion's special housing committee, which has been holding hearings in the nation's capital, CIO Housing Committee Chairman R. J. Thomas urged a seven-point program to spur the construction of necessary homes throughout the country.

But, he warned, opposition forces have already pitched two strikes to the government's homes program, tied one arm behind it with red tape, and blinded it with a barrage of newspaper and magazine propaganda. Unless action is forthcoming quickly, Thomas said, the entire program is apt to be bogged down completely.

Housing officials here read the election returns to mean:

Attacked by real estate interests and scores of Republican candidates as "socialistic"—despite the sponsorship of Senator Taft (R. O.)—the bill has been described by public housing and labor experts as a "must" to solve the national shortage of homes for veterans and workers.

• Tremendous pressure will be engendered by Congressional and real estate foes of OPA to force a 15% rise in rent controls as a prelude to scrapping of all lids on rent figures.

The National Assn. of Real Estate Boards has already demanded the 15% rise, and has asked that rent controls be lifted from all new buildings. NAREB is also carrying on a running war with the government's Natl. Housing Administration on half a dozen issues related to mass construction of new homes.

• An increasing barrage is due on all government housing activity except the Federal Housing Agency—the FHA being excluded from the attack since its principal function is to guarantee real estate loans held by banks, loan associations and insurance companies.

Senator Owen Brewster of Maine, a prominent Republican, led off this phase of the anti-housing war last week by producing what he claimed was a "secret" report of a government investigating committee purportedly written in the spring of 1945.

The Real Estate association, which convenes next week in Atlantic City, will adopt a strongly-worded policy statement aimed at almost every feature of government housing. It is certain to be echoed by many Congressmen.

IN WASHINGTON, meanwhile, Thomas called upon the Legion's new special housing committee to "make constructive recommendations which will be in the interest of the nation and not merely find fault with the program that is now being carried forward."

Thomas urged a seven-point program for the veterans, including a special session of Congress to pass the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, the use of existing housing facilities now lying idle, the halting of all non-essential commercial construction, and speedy development of factory-produced, mass construction of low-cost homes.

"The Veterans Emergency Housing Program has come to bat with two strikes on it, one arm tied behind its back, and a bandage over both eyes," Thomas told the Legionnaires.

"If it wants to make a hit now, it will have to pull the ball over toward the left field bleachers.

"Strike One was the twenty year deficit in housing. This was a real curve ball. It carried all the stuff of the speculative builder, years of neglect, waste and inefficiency of a backward industry, and the forces of scarcity production that kept building thirty percent behind requirements throughout the depression. House building supply has always been below demand.

"Strike Two was a blooper. With the end of the war, the situation was ready-made for a strong program of house-building. But President Truman listened to coaches John Snyder, now Secretary of the Treasury, and John Small, head of the Civilian Production Administration.

"As a result, he lifted all government controls on building and high-priced private residences grabbed labor and materials which might otherwise have produced low-cost housing for veterans.

Pummelled by police and company goons, this CIO Auto Workers man was a victim of Allis-Chalmers inspired violence as strikebreakers tried to smash picket lines at the West Allis, Wis., plant... An estimated 15,000 pickets marched outside company gates after management had rejected union offers of arbitration.

TEAMSTERS' RAID A DUD

THE ATTEMPT of the AFL Teamsters to raid the CIO Brewery Workers flopped in Allegheny county common pleas court, Pittsburgh, this week when Judge Thompson refused to grant an injunction restraining a group of distributors from handling beer made under CIO contracts.

This ended the Teamsters' second attempt to obtain an injunction. The first was before Judge Ellenbogen who suggested that the unions declare a 15-day truce and then withdrew from the case when it was pointed out that he was formerly a Teamsters' counsel.

The group of distributors had broken away from the Western Penna. Beer Distributors Assn. declaring that they "would take whatever steps should be necessary to insure a steady supply of beer from local breweries." The Teamsters declared that their contract with the association provides that members cannot haul any beer from breweries which the AFL labels "unfair."

The Teamsters had also threatened to refuse to deliver supplies to breweries under contract with the Brewery Workers or haul beer made by CIO members, and to place an embargo on hauling brewery supplies and even food from railroad sidings.

During all these threats, the Pittsburgh breweries continued to operate, although a number of bottlers over whom the Teamsters claimed jurisdiction stayed at home. Last weekend 652 of the 825 affected bottlers voted they favored continued membership in the CIO.

A few days earlier 300 members of CIO unions had demonstrated their solidarity with the Brewery Workers by marching behind a sound truck to the Duquesne Brewery which the Teamster were picketing. CIO representatives speaking from the sound truck blasted the Teamsters' efforts as a brazen attempt to raid the jurisdiction of the Brewery Workers.

"The attempt to raid the Brewery Workers was not without humor," said Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, who sent Reps. William B. Taylor and Peter Marcunos to assist CIO Regional Director Anthony I. Federoff in protecting the interests of the Brewery Workers.

"If the Teamsters were consistent, they would refuse to haul beer in CIO trucks on CIO tires and to wear CIO clothes. The only persons who would be punished would be the AFL bartenders, whom the Teamsters asked not to serve CIO beer. They would be thrown out of work if they heeded that request."

The Brewery Workers withdrew in 1940 from the AFL after refusing to surrender its drivers to the Teamsters. After remaining independent six years, they voted in a referendum last summer to join the CIO.

UAW BACKS ALL-OUT ALLIS CHALMERS FIGHT

By ESTHER HANDLER

ALL Milwaukee labor took steps this week to mobilize forces to assist Allis Chalmers strikers in their life and death struggle against one of America's most vicious and irresponsible employers. Following a visit to Milwaukee last weekend by Sec.-Treas. George F. Addes of the CIO Auto Workers, presidents of 17 UAW-CIO locals in this city met and formed a UAW strategy committee to support the strike.

A similar organization was set up among other CIO locals by CIO Regional Director F. J. Michel, and a meeting was scheduled with AFL leaders to work out plans for participation of that body. Calling for all-out support for this strike, Addes told Milwaukee UAW leaders:

"In my judgment the Allis Chalmers Company has been chosen to spearhead a drive to destroy organized labor throughout Wisconsin and throughout the U. S. This strike has gone beyond the stage of a purely local situation. Its outcome will vitally affect every working man and woman in the nation.

Addes said the international would increase its contribution to the strikers and that the facilities of the union would be used to do an intensive public relations job to combat the hostile Milwaukee press and effectively bring the strike issues before the people.

Meanwhile the company continues to provoke picket line violence in various ways including massing of scabs and supervisory employes away from the plant and marching them with police escort through picket lines.

U. S. labor conciliator Noel Fox continued his efforts this week to bring about reopening of negotiations recessed two weeks ago. Prospects of new talks were slim, however, since the company continues to reject the UAW request for arbitration.

UTAH SURVEY SHOWS NEED FOR FEPC

Between one-half and one-third of Utah's employers and a roughly equivalent proportion of its workers are directly affected by discriminatory racial practices, according to voluntary replies to a questionnaire sent out by the state senate committee to investigate discrimination against minorities.

In view of the fact that replies were voluntary, the rate of discrimination is probably actually higher, but most answers were surprisingly frank. Sixty-nine of 169 employers who replied admitted they discriminate against Negroes, Mexicans, Japanese or other minorities in employment and advancement.

Furthermore, 47 of 162 employers said they were unwilling to grant Negro citizens the same seniority rights as white citizens and 27 of 178 said they were unwilling to pay the same wages even though Negroes possessed equal skill. However, 98 of 160 said they would eliminate this discrimination voluntarily if their competitors did so.

The committee report recommended immediate enactment of a state fair labor practices law.

TRANSPORT WORKERS DEMAND END OF STALLING

By DAVID A. GORDON

THE men who run N. Y. City's subways, trolleys and buses, angered at a delay of eight months in granting their demands for higher wages and genuine labor relations, have determined to end the stalling.

The Joint Executive Committee of the New York local of the CIO Transport Workers this week voted to recommend strike action to a membership meeting next week. No date has been fixed for the membership meeting. In addition, the Joint Executive Committee authorized a demonstration of city transit workers for Nov. 9 at the offices of the Board of Transportation.

The 32,000 employes of the N. Y. City Board of Transportation, a State body with autonomous power to fix wages and working conditions, demanded wage increases and collective bargaining last December through the Transport Workers.

Following a strike threat in February of this year. Mayor William O'Dwyer appointed an advisory committee, headed by Arthur S. Meyer, chairman of the N. Y State Mediation Board, to study the city transit situation and to make recommendations.

The committee held numerous hearings and handed down its report September 9, completely upholding the TWU's demands. The committee recommended a 20-cent-an-hour wage increase for operating employes, and collective bargaining machinery, including a secret ballot election to enable the city transit workers to choose their own collective bargaining agency.

After additional delays, the Board of Transportation on Nov. 4 voted to put the pay increases into effect. Meanwhile, the Citizens Budget Commission, a private clique of banking and real estate interests, filed a court suit to block the granting of retroactive pay to the workers.

The workers had been promised that the wage increases would be retroactive to July 1, the start of the budget year, following the Meyer Committee's recommendation.

Minnesota CIO:

Urges Progressives' Unity

By RAY MUNSON

UNITED behind a constructive program of action on the economic, legislative and political fronts, the Minnesota CIO held its ninth annual convention in Duluth last weekend.

Walter J. Smith, president, and Rodney C. Jacobson, secretary-treasurer, whose reports to the convention showed a membership growth of 12,000 over the past year, were unanimously returned to office.

The convention urged that a Minnesota people's legislative conference and lobby be held prior to the convening of the state legislature to unite labor, farmer, veteran, small-business and consumer groups behind a common program.

"We are dedicated to the aim of uniting in a single great progressive army all the men and women who marched with Franklin D. Roosevelt and are carrying on today in his spirit," the convention's over-all policy statement concluded, noting the emergence on the national scene of the Conference of Progressives in Chicago recently and promising full support to their work.

The newly affiliated Brewery Workers Union added John Wyant to the executive board of the State CIO Council. Other new faces on the board are Clarence A. Hathaway from the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Union; Hilding Schoen from the Public Workers; and Michael McMahon from the Auto Workers.

WALL STREET CLERKS SIGNING UP WITH CIO

By Federated Press

There's a story down in Wall Street that you can't tell a $100,000-a-year banker apart from a $30-a-week bank clerk until lunchtime. Then the real McCoy gilt-edge bank officials head for their plushy clubs where they dawdle over 5-course meals and their white collar help sit out on benches in the public squares eating the skinny sandwich they've brought from home.

The story has a November 1946 punch-line. The well-dressed bank clerks no longer spend their lunch hours on park benches. More likely they're clustered on a street corner within earshot of one of the dozens of soundtrucks the United Office & Professional Workers sends cruising through the canyon-like streets of the world's richest financial district.

Soundtrucks, newspaper and leaflet distributions, dramatic lunchtime picketing demonstrations are all techniques being used by the CIO local in its half-million dollar Operation Wall Street. Before the drive was formally launched right after Labor Day, the union already had contracts with a number of banks, including J. P. Morgan's billion-dollar Bankers Trust Co.

Since then the union has signed up a conservative estimate of 3,000 out of a potential 75,000 workers and penetrated most of the city's leading banks.

It's an index of the desperation of these ultra-conservative workers who regard joining a union as an extremely radical step that so many of them are flocking into the UOPWA. During the war 60% of the bank employes in New York had to hold down two jobs at once to keep abreast of rocketing living costs.

While bank profits reached unprecedented heights in the war years and continue to hang up new records, average bank employes, some with as much as 10 years' experience, have been struggling along at anywhere from $20 to $40 a week.

Forced to dress neatly and wear those hard-to-find white collars, they have been brought closer than ever to starvation by the disappearance of the secondary jobs that tided them through the war.

Behind the dignified facade of the high-ceilinged marble columned bank often exist intolerable conditions—bad lighting, poor ventilation, inadequate rest rooms, overtime work at a moment's notice. (One bank president, trying to stem the union surge, completely remodeled the employes' rest rooms, then eliminated the rest period!)

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Last week the writer visited Milwaukee, Wis., at the behest of President Murray, together with John Brophy, Director, Industrial Union Councils, Del Garst, Assistant Director of Organization and Anthony Wayne Smith, Assistant to Mr. Brophy. The internal trouble of the council necessitated this trip. The CIO has taken over the Council and has received the approval of the contending groups on this. Rep. Peter Markunas has been placed in charge.

An investigation will continue and specific recommendations will be made by the committee.

The writer also addressed a meeting of Steelworkers in the Pittsburgh District, of which Joseph Goney is director. It was a very large meeting and the message of CIO was well received.

Winston-Salem Hard On Strikers

CIO laundry workers in Winston-Salem, N. C., who are on strike against 30c-an-hour wages, are being harassed each day by city police officials.

On Oct. 30, seven workers were tried in city court on warrants sworn out by police and company scabs. Charged with nuisance, simple assault, and in one case resisting arrest, the seven workers were sentenced to from 3 months to a year. In some cases, the sentences are to be served in jail, in others on road gangs.

The union is calling for protests from other CIO unions to Judge LeRoy Sams and Mayor George Lentz, City Hall, Winston-Salem, N. C. Financial support for the workers should be addressed to Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union, 247½ N. Main St., Winston-Salem, N. C.

UE Survey Shows Workers

CAN'T AFFORD NECESSITIES

THE CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week announced that a cost of living survey among individual electrical workers showed that "the present earnings reported by 503 average workers is below what is needed to provide even the bare necessities of life."

Facts revealed by the survey underscored the importance of the union's wage policy conference in N. Y. City Nov. 11, which will be attended by delegates representing employes in the largest electrical manufacturing companies in the nation. Delegates will represent workers at General Electric, Westinghouse, General Motors electrical division, RCA, the Sylvania Electric Corp. and the General Cable Co.

What is there to stop us from coming out for the elimination of wages entirely?

The UE survey revealed further that "because of the higher cost of necessities, workers have substantially reduced their purchase of milk, butter, eggs and clothes for their families" and have been compelled to "use their meager savings to get along."

The communities in which UE made its cost-of-living survey of 503 average electrical workers were N. Y. City, Rome and Schenectady, N. Y., Lancaster, Pa., Chicago, Ill., Fort Wayne, Ind., Dayton, Ohio and St. Louis, Mo.

"The vast majority of UE members have found," the survey states, "that since OPA controls were removed on June 30, they had to buy less of milk, butter and eggs because of the sharp increases in the prices of these essential foods.

Milk	417	83%
Butter	417	83%
Eggs	366	73%

"Four hundred and fifty-five workers or 90% of the total studied cut down on clothing costs. Two hundred and forty-seven workers or almost one-half of those questioned have been forced to dig into their savings. In many cases workers reduced their purchases of food and still had to use their savings to get along.

"Nor could savings be expected to finance the living expenses of these workers except for the shortest period of time."

Food & Tobacco Union

FIGHTS STARVATION WAGES

A NATIONWIDE campaign to "end substandard wages in the food, tobacco and fiber industries" was launched last week by the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers Board meeting in Philadelphia.

The campaign will include "demands for substantial wage increases," for 30-day wage reopening clauses, universal time and a half for overtime work, and an end to "wartime government ceilings on agricultural wages," the FTA announced.

Declaring that wages in these industries "have always been substandard and have always been based on the barest subsistence needs of the workers," the union pointed out that postwar gains after V-J Day have been more than wiped out by the rise in living costs since the death of price control.

"The rise in living costs since the end of price control, and particularly the rise in food costs, have more than wiped out the gains won through collective bargaining and hard fought strikes," FTA said.

The board condemned "the Hoover-Vandenberg-Byrnes State Dept." policies as promoting war, pledged continued cooperation in the CIO Southern organizing campaign, and thanked CIO Pres. Philip Murray and other CIO unions for their assistance in the NLRB election campaign among the northern California cannery workers.

CALLS FOR SEAMEN's PAY HIKES

A GENERAL cost-of-living wage increase for seamen was proposed by Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union under a January wage reopening clause in the union contract.

Curran made the recommendation to the NMU national council last week after declaring that "substantial wage increases, obtained by the strength of our organizations in the past months, are now dissipated because of the inflationary spiral in prices that has been turned loose."

Along with a pay increase, the seamen should seek elimination of inequities, standardizing of skilled ratings and prepare together with all other member unions of the Committee for Maritime Unity for an all-out mobilization to meet the June 15 expiration of the contract.

As a six point program for the June 1947 contract, Curran recommended: an increase in real wages; the 40-hour week, based on a 4-watch system; a health and welfare fund based on a percentage of payrolls or tonnage figures; an annual wage; full rotary hiring for all ratings, including key ratings; and proper manning scales for all vessels.

DIXIE LAWS ANTI-UNION

(This is the second of two articles based on a survey of the South appearing in the October issue of the Monthly Labor Review, publication of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Labor Dept.)

The authors of the survey of the South in the Monthly Labor Review conclude that while there are few laws on the statute books of the Southern states protecting labor's right to organize and bargain collectively, anti-labor legislation has decidely increased during the past five or six years.

The Review points out that all Southern states "except five, Kenteucky, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina and Tennessee, have union regulatory laws. Many of these have been held invalid and others are in process of appeal to the court."

The repeated unsuccessful attempts to the AFL to organize the Southern workers are recounted in the Review, which asserts:

"The persistence of the efforts of the workers of the South to organize reflects the importance attached by workers to the role that trade-unionism can play in modern industrial society."

Sprucing Up

WHAT PRICE THAT SMOOTH LOOK?

By HANNA SHERMAN

EVERYWHERE we women go we are bombarded with constant reminders that what shows between the hairline and the neckline is darned important.

Advertisers urge us to "keep that schoolgirl complexion," to have "the skin you love to touch"

Truth to tell, if most of us could have the proverbial three wishes one of them would be a beautiful complexion. Fortunately we don't have to believe everything we see on billboards.

Actually, most of us who are in reasonably good health, can acquire a lovely skin. All it takes is a sensible diet and a regular routine of external skin care.

The brand of cold cream and the make of soap matter not at all.

One of the most attractive women I know has a radiant and glowing skin. Yet her routine is very simple and easy to follow. You can use the same system and see a marked improvement in your appearance in even two short weeks. Here's all you need do.

AT night, before you go to bed, take time out to remove all traces of make-up from your face and neck with a good quality of cleansing or cold cream. You know that it need not be expensive cream to be good. Then wash your face and neck thoroughly with warm water and mild soap. Remember that your skin is delicate and very hot water may injure it. Now rinse with warm water, graduating to cool and finish with a final splash of cold water. It's a wonderful stimulant! Next, dry your face and neck, but gently. Again apply cold cream to your face and neck and leave it on for fifteen minutes.

A good idea is to use this routine before your nightly tub. The warm water from your bath will help the cream to do its necessary job of lubrication.

After 15 minutes remove the excess cream with cleansing tissue. You need not go to bed with a messy face. In the morning it's easy. Just splash your face and neck with cold water or use a skin freshener. Then you are ready to apply your make-up. Remember—no soap and water before you face those wintry blasts.

DIET also plays an important role in achieving a lovely complexion. No amount of creaming, massage, patting or stimulation will produce a fine complexion unless your skin is properly nourished from within.

Avoid rich foods, spicy sauces, over-indulgence in sweets, too many soft drinks, and of course, too much alcohol. More than one pack of cigarettes a day is also hard on your skin.

Your diet should include, for health and beauty, green vegetables, fruit juices, eggs, milk and other dairy products.

I would recommend this routine for all women with normal skin. In other columns, we'll talk about the problems of skin care for older women, very dry skin, excessively oily skin and acne condition.

For a beautiful complexion remember to make skin care a habitual and regular part of your daily grooming.

WOMEN AT WORK

"NOW is the time to push for elimination of discrimination against women workers and to gain headway in improving their wages and working conditions," Secretary of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach told a conference of union leaders held last week by the U. S. Women's Bureau.

Asserting that the problem was not merely legislative, but also a matter for collective bargaining, Schwellenbach urged the labor movement to accept the responsibility of seeing that there was no discrimination against women in industry.

Women showed their capabilities during the war, he said, and the lesson should not be forgotten in the present need for workers.

Main subjects discussed at the conference were equal pay, wage determination techniques, minimum wage legislation, women's earnings, night work and the political and civil status of women.

Plans were also laid to press the drive for a national Equal Pay Act and to redouble efforts to arouse strong "back-home" support for the bill introduced as S 1178 in the 79th session of Congress. The point was stressed that equal pay legislation would safeguard men's wages as well as women's by protecting the general wage structure and purchasing power.

YWCA AND LABOR

Organized labor and the YWCA have many common concerns which call for mutual understanding and close cooperation, says an important pamphlet by Dorothy Hubbard Bishop, "What about the YWCA and Labor?" published by the Natl. Board of the YWCA, 600 Lexington Ave., New York 22, N. Y.

"The Association has a skilled program staff, buildings and a desire to include industrial and white-collar workers in its constituency," writes Mrs. Bishop.

"The unions are made up of workers, and once they have given consideration to the economic wants of their membership, many unions are concerned with the needs and desires of their people for leisure interests and educational opportunities. "Sometimes the unions themselves make provision for these interests. Sometimes they look to community resources. Increasingly the YWCA has tried to supply the answer."

The pamphlet describes the practical ways various YW groups have cooperated with unions in the community and points out that the training and use of women leaders, a number of whom have functioned effectively in the union movement, has been one of its important objectives.

It is full of infirmation and suggestions that will be of great help to CIO unions, particularly those with a large women membership.

Reprints of actions taken by the YWCA on industrial workers are given in an appendix.

COOPERATIVES

Teamwork with unions will help the cooperative movement made big strides in the next few years, says an article in the October issue of Co-op Magazine, monthly publication of the Cooperative League of the USA.

"Every local co-op should have its labor committee, and every local union, its co-op committee," writes Andrew P. Jensen, labor relations director of the Midland Cooperative Wholesale in an article entitled "Toward Co-op-Labor Collaboration." Cooperative League headquarters are at 167 W. 12 St. N. Y. 11. N. Y.

The Consumers' Cooperative in Burlington, Vt. which has long desired to promote an interest in the co-op movement among industrial union workers in the area, states in its news bulletin that this plan now is off to a good start. Following up the program announced by the United Auto Workers, advocating support of the cooperatives, the Burlington Co.-op approached local UAW officials and found them mutually interested. As a result, co-op leaders were invited to speak at the CIO county council and at a UAW membership meeting, and Don Evans, chairman of the union education committee was appointed a member of the Co-op board.

★ ★ ★

Sec. Treas. George F. Addes, of the CIO United Auto Workers, speaking at a meeting called to raise funds for a co-op supermarket in Pontiac, Mich., told the audience that "so long as we believe in strengthening democracy we should participate in democratic organizations such as unions and co-ops."

The local CIO Council is actively supporting the co-op supermarket project.

YOUNG GERMANS LEARN DEMOCRATIC WAYS AT UNION SCHOOL IN ALPS

By LARRY ROGIN

Educational Director, Textile Workers Union

Larry Rogin has recently returned to this country after four months in Germany, where he served with a special government commission which proposed methods for establishing German schools on modern, democratic lines. In the course of his work, he had considerable opportunity to meet and know trade unionists and their leaders in the American zone of occupation.

WE finished our excellent lunch at the military government hotel in Garnish Partenkirchen and climbed into a jeep for the ride up into the Bavarian Alps to visit the youth training camp being conducted by the Bavarian Trade Union Federation.

There was a storybook character about the town as we drove through it on our way to the mountain trail leading to the camp. Long known as a resort center, the tradition of the town is being followed now more than ever as the American Army takes advantage of its facilities.

The ever present American GIs and the Army insignia which have been painted on such public buildings as the 1936 Olympic Wintersports Arena were the only obvious signs of the war. For Garnish was spared the bombing which has turned into shambles almost every one of Germany's cities.

There was a storybook character to the scenery, too, as we drove up the rough and narrow mountain trail, and the jeep demonstrated its prowess at mountain climbing to a couple of American civilians. The mountain dwellings and sheds for the storage of hay, the cows pasturing on the steep slopes, the valleys surrounded by high peaks, some of which were snow-covered in early September, all seemed to come right out of a children's picture book.

But we were recalled sharply to reality when we arrived at our destination, Raintaler Hof, where 40 young workers from Munich were completing two weeks of union training.

For in these young trade unionsts and their awareness of the very practical problem they faced we found the spirit that may make possible the rebuilding of a democracy in their nation, despite the obstacles created by 12 years of gangster misrule which finally led them into the most destructive war the world has known.

THESE youngsters represented the new spirit in the revived trade union movement in the American zone of Germany, a movement which is now perhaps the greatest force for democracy within our zone as its numbers have increased to a figure as high as they had ever been in pre-Hitler Germany.

Unionism and its democratic practices are new to these young workers. For the greater part of their lives they had been subjected to the barrage of poisonous propaganda of the Nazis and Hitler youth movements.

The very buildings in which classes were held, built in the 1920's by the Bavarian Metal Workers Union, had been corrupted by the Hitler Labor Front into a "love-home" and only recently were turned back to the unions by the American Military Government.

Yet while they were only learning to use the techniques of democracy these young workers were proud of their successes and had no doubts of the superiority of democratic practices to those of the dictatorship under which they had been brought up.

We were quickly informed that the school was run by an elected student council, that there was complete freedom of discussion in the classes, and that the opinion of every single individual was respected no matter how much it might be opposed by the others.

TO American trade unionists this would be an every day occurrence, but to Germans brought up under the Hitler terror it was something new, and unfortunately not even now universally practiced.

We got a chance to see how free discussion worked in practice when we met with the group, questioned them about their activities and answered their questions about American unions.

These young German workers and others whom I met in my five weeks stay in the American zone, are starved for knowledge about what is going on in the outside world. They want to know how American unions function, about our young people, about American education, and of course they wanted to know about American policy in Germany. With many aspects of this policy they were familiar and frank to express their opinions.

They were anxious for us to know how the trade union youth organizations functioned in the shop, and—through elected representatives—in a city-wide council which planned educational and recreational programs for union young people.

THE school at Raintaler Hof is but one of many now being conducted by the unions in the American Zone of Germany. The trade union leaders, recently elected at state-wide conventions in the three "laender" which comprise the zone, recognize the importance of youth training to the future of the unions.

"From these young people must come the future leadership of the German unions," one old-time trade unionist told me. "Yet they have had no opportunities for union experience and they must unlearn all of the poison which the Nazis have fed them. That's why we are giving so much emphasis to our trade union education."

This unionist had paid for his belief in democracy by repeated imprisonments in Nazi concentration camps. The samples of the trade union youth which I met indicate that he will not be disappointed in the results of the training being carried on today.

Many folk and trade union schools similar to the one in the Bavarian Alps described in Rogin's article were scattered through Germany in pre-Hitler years. One of these resident schools held at the Sachsenburg Castle in Frankenberg, Saxony, is shown above.

READING NOTES

Roll up your sleeves and go to work in a shop, advises CIO Education & Research Director Kermit Eby in an article on "Opportunity for Young Men in the Labor Movement" in the October issue of FUTURE, publication of the U. S. Junior Chamber of Commerce.

A sound way to become associated with trade unionism and make education and training, count, Eby says, is to start from the bottom and learn "at first hand the daily problems and conditions under which the mass of men work."

Both the CIO and the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers are plugging for an annual wage, states an article by Mort Heineman in the December issue of Pageant, on "The Case for the Guaranteed Annual Wage." What the article fails to make clear is the difference between the CIO and the NAM approach.

The writer, who is described as a successful N. Y. advertising man, offers as one approved exhibit for the annual wage an account of a Wisconsin building firm which persuaded its workers in 1937 to take a reduction in average hourly pay from 90c to 75c in return for a guaranteed annual wage.

Under the CIO's annual wage plan, of course, any scheme based on lowering wage standards would be ruled out at once.

Heineman seems to be appealing in his article mostly to the "smart" business man, concerned solely with increasing profits. For instance he quotes Henry Nunn, shoe manufacturer, who has an annual wage plan in his concern (the workers belong to an "independent union") as saying, "I'm not 'better' than a reactionary employer . . . I'm just a little smarter."

In conclusion he quotes this remark by Ira Mosher, NAM Board chairman: "I am convinced that there are few industries in existence today which cannot do a better job of stabilizing employment . . . And, while you (the employer) are the only one who can give it . . . the Government and the unions are going to do everything in their power to take full credit for getting it—from you."

Survey Graphic magazine announces that a special issue devoted to race discrimination will be published in mid-January, well in advance of Inter-Racial Sunday, Feb. 9, so that it may be used as a major source of reference by clergymen and church leaders.

The special number entitled "Segregation: Color Pattern from the Past; Our Struggle to Wipe It Out," is the twelfth in Survey Graphic's "Calling America Series." In November 1942 a special issue on "Color: Unfinished Business of Democracy" sold out a few weeks after publication even though nearly twice as many copies as usual were printed.

Copies of the forthcoming special number may be ordered in advance, from Survey Graphic, 112 East 19 St., N. Y. 3, N. Y. Single copies 60c; two for $1. Reduced prices for larger orders range from five for $2 to 5,000 at 30c each.

Mid-West Conference

GEORGE T. GUERNSEY, national CIO assistant director of education, conducted workshops on public relations and on visual aids at the annual Midwest conference on workers education sponsored by the American Labor Education Service November 1-3 in Milwaukee, Wis.

Frank Fernbach, United Steelworkers, spoke on the Labor Extension bill and led a panel discussion on collective bargaining problems, and Victor Reuther, United Auto Workers Education director, demonstrated the UAW's new easel chart talks, called "turnover talks".

Other CIO educators at the conference included Svend Godfredson, Packinghouse Workers education director; Hugh Richard, Racine, Wis., UAW education director; and Walter Sassaman, education director, UAW Region 4.

Murals Unveiled

Two murals by the young talented Negro artist, John T. Biggers, which were presented to the CIO United Transport Service Employes by Hampton Institute, were unveiled last week by the union's president, Willard Townsend, at a ceremony held in the UTSE-CIO center in Chicago.

One of these striking paintings, entitled "The Dying Soldier", attracted considerable attention at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City in 1943 when a special exhibit of the work of the students of Dr. Viktor Lowenfeld, chairman of the Art Dept. at Hampton, was on display there.

This mural, the first Biggers did, portrays the thoughts of a dying soldier caught in barbed wire on the battlefield. The other, "The Rural Preacher," presents a pastor delivering a sermon to an audience which is responding emotionally.

The 22-year-old artist, a former plumber's helper and a veteran of three years in the Navy was guest of honor at the unveiling.

The ceremony which initiated the union's cultural program featured a panel discussion of "Art in its Relation to Social Progress."

At Highlander School

A TWO-DAY training program for local union leaders of the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers from towns in Georgia and Tennessee was held Oct. 27-28 at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

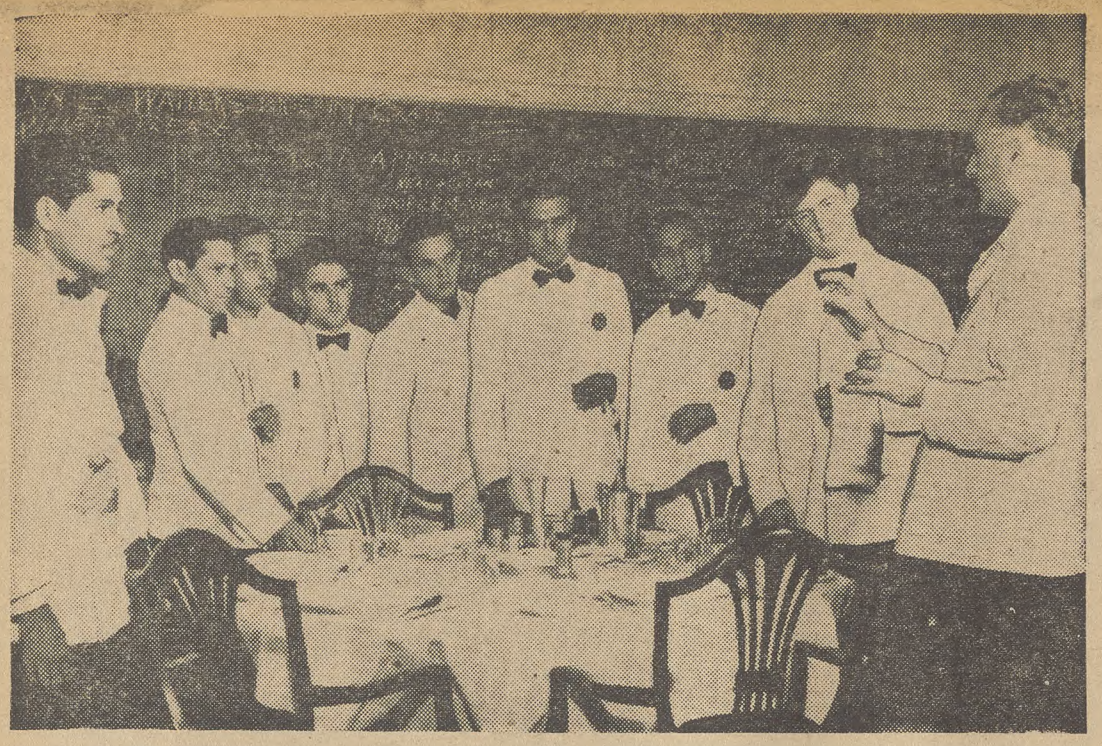
AFHW Education Director William Rafsky conducted the program which included practice and instruction on running union meetings, speaking at union affairs, and handling grievances.

A showing of the film, NOW THE PEACE, (Natl. Film Board of Canada) was followed by a discussion of the responsibility of workers as union members and as citizens, to achieve a lasting peace and a world of plenty for all.

In New Job

AGNES DOUTY, former education director in Georgia for the CIO Textile Workers Union, resigned to become assistant to Director Frank McCallister of the Georgia Workers Education Service, joint CIO, AFL group.

She served as workers education specialist for the U. S. Office of Education in Washington for several years; worked for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers education dept.; taught at most of the established trade union schools, and is regularly a member of the summer faculty of the University of Wisconsin's School for Workers.



1 (Top) Students at the U. S. Maritime Commission's steward training school get a blackboard briefing. Drummed into their minds in a six weeks' course are such instruetions as: "When guests are talking, approach them with 'scuse me, sir.' Then give them what they want."

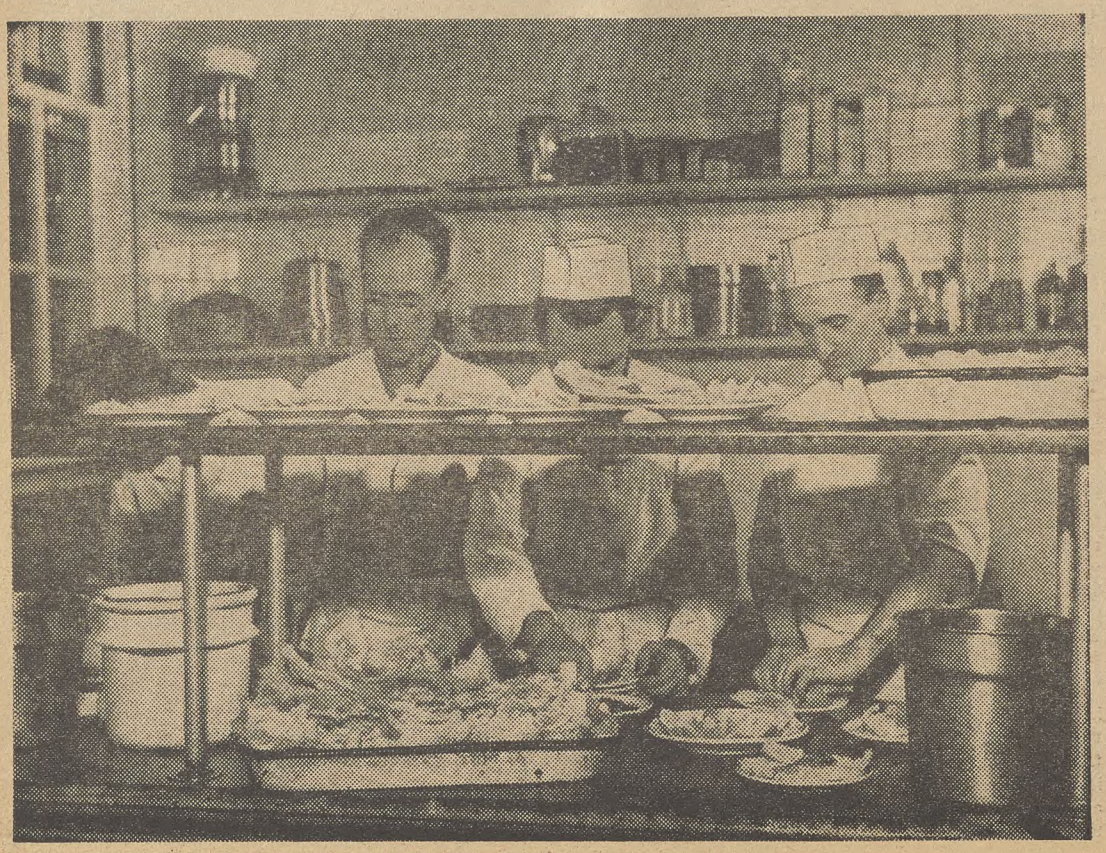
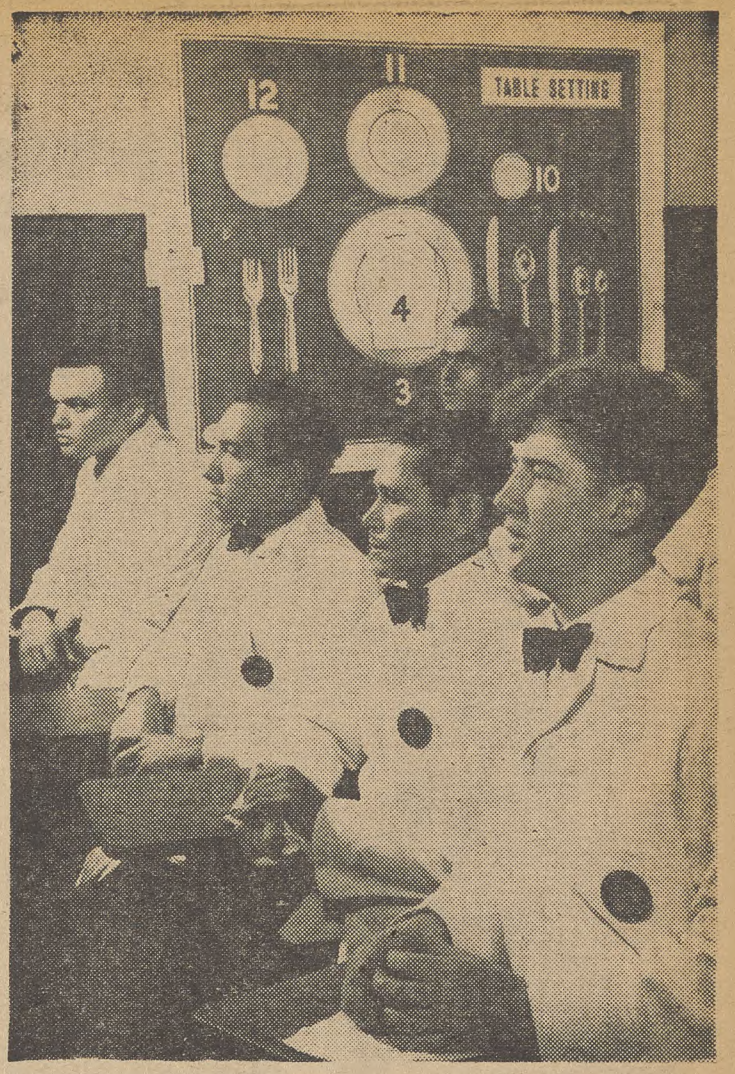
3 (Below) Fancy salad arrangements and dressings are important if American ships are to meet the standards set by other countries' competition. All the members of the faculty who teach the students how to prepare and serve meals have had years of experience on first class passenger liners.





4 Alert students have all had at least six months' prior experience or pre-war service on first class liners.

SCHOOL FOR SERVICE

IT'S service that counts. And labor, management and the U. S. government are making sure that people who can afford to travel on first class American passenger liners are going to get it.

First class stewards for first class liners are being trained at the newly opened U. S. Maritime Commission school at Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn, N. Y. The school is sponsored jointly by the Commission, the CIO Natl. Maritime Union and ship operators.

The NMU selects men eligible for the course. They must have had either six months' prior experience in the jobs for which they are being trained or pre-war service on first class liners.

Four hundred men at a time are given a six weeks' course in rendering prompt, efficient and courteous service on shipboard. Facsimile staterooms and dining salons, complete in every detail, are "workshops."

The school is an outgrowth of labor-management cooperation during the war. While bread and butter issues still cause conflict, both NMU and management are agreed on the desirability of "building the finest peace-time merchant fleet the nation has ever known."

5 The passenger is the payoff. A prospective steward demonstrates to his instructor how he will serve breakfast.

Less Food, Less Clothing

HIGH PRICES CUT WORKERS' BUYING

INCREASED prices in consumer goods have already led to sharp curtailment in the purchases of industrial workers, the CIO Dept. of Research and Education announced today, on the basis of a nationwide survey conducted among workers' families in basic manufacturing industries.

78.2% of the families are buying less milk. 88.9% are buying less butter and oleomargarine. 72.5% of the families are buying fewer eggs.

The survey also disclosed that 83.7% of the families have cut their purchases of clothing, and 59.9% of the families have been forced to dig into their savings or reduce their amount of savings in order to meet current costs of living. 71% of the families have $300 or less in savings.

AVERAGE weekly wage of the families interviewed was $44.83, which corresponds closely with the Bureau of Labor Statistics figure of $44.90 as the average weekly earnings in August of workers in manufacturing industries.

"There are significant portents in these statistics," commented Kermit Eby, CIO director of research and education. "They indicate that at a period of the nation's greatest prosperity, working class families are rapidly being priced out of the market on essential food needs.

"Lowered consumption of food by industrial workers directly affects the economic well-being of our farmers. As their sales recede, their power to buy machinery and other industrial products is limited, and the whole economy suffers."

THE extent of the reduced buying of specific commodities is indicated in the following figures. The survey found that the affected families are buying 4.1 less quarts of milk per week than previously. The figure ranged from 3.4 quarts to 4.6 quarts.

Butter and oleo purchases fell an average of 1.3 pounds a week.

Egg purchases dropped 1.7 dozen a week on the average, with the figure ranging from 1.4 to 1.8.

Practically all of the workers indicated a sharp curtailment of clothing purchases by their families.

The replies disclosed that the great majority of workers, over 70%, have $300 or less in savings. In many instances workers have already exhausted all their savings, and have nothing left in reserve to meet the pressure of soaring living costs.

Butchers take heed. Prices of low-grade cuts of meat in Washington, D. C. stores reportedly tumbled this week following a petition drive against high markups by the Washington Committee for Consumer Protection. Enlisting Mrs. Wallace Leslie Douglas (right) in the campaign for meat at 60c a pound or less is Committee member Mrs. Mary Shaw. Mrs. Douglas is the daughter of Henry A. Wallace.

TO HELL WITH THE PEOPLE, MONOPOLIES SAY

YOU wouldn't know it from reading the average big commercial daily paper, but Atty. Gen. Tom Clark recently spoke in Boston before the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, and told some not-so-kind truths about big business moguls who stifle competition to fleece the consuming public.

Speaking on free enterprise and the antitrust laws, Clark lashed out at "these greedy men who clamor loudest for free enterprise and opportunity . . . They would have freedom to insulate their business from the uncertainties of competition and freedom to gorge themselves with monopolistic profits."

MONOPOLY suppression of inventions, and the smothering of discoveries which would raise the American standard of living were outlined by Clark, who told the businessmen:

"You know about the match trust and its miracle match which would light one thousand times—but which never reached the market. No conventional monopolist would think of allowing such a match to reach the consumer. The consumer might be benefited but match sales would be drastically reduced.

"The introduction of fluorescent lighting was retarded. Here power company revenue was at stake. Again, so that more electric lamps could be sold, the manufacturers built them with shorter life."

Clark also pointed to monopoly withholding of vitamin D from sufferers from rickets, a disease of the undernourished.

"Some years ago," he said, "patents for producing vitamin D by utlra-violet ray came into the hands of a university foundation located in a butter producing area. The sole right to use this artificial method of producing vitamin D in foods belonged to the foundation.

"The foundation denied licenses for irradiating oleomargarine with vitamin D to manufacturers of oleomargarine because the patent holder was 'unsympathetic to oleomargarine.'

"Monopolists think of their profits first and the people last."

SEE COURT TESTS FOR LAWS RESTRICTING UNIONS

CONSTITUTIONAL amendments to outlaw the closed shop were passed in three non-industrial states in Tuesday's voting, but each will probably face a court test in the near future.

Massachusetts voters favored a proposition to require all unions in the state to file annual financial reports with the state government.

60 VETS GRAB VACANT HOMES

THE first major squatters' movement in the U. S. hit a veterans' housing project in Chicago last week when 60 ex-GIs and their families took over unrented apartments in the yet unfinished 186-unit Airport Homes and announced their intention of staying "until we're thrown out."

The GIs, who included several Purple Heart holders and at least one Presidential Citation wearer, said they applied to the Chicago Housing Authority a year ago for permission to rent the apartments but that no action had been forthcoming.

Over 125 units of the project have been completed and rented to veterans but other finished apartments have been standing vacant. Housing Authority spokesmen earlier said the units were not rented because of broken windows.

The vets, most of whom have been living either doubled up with other families or split up among several homes, marched in a body on the project, demanded the keys from the caretaker and took possession of the 60 vacant apartments.

STILL PROBING BILBO

The Senate War Investigating Committee is not yet through with Sen. Theodore Bilbo (D., Miss.), his alleged deals with war contractors, and his private "dream house" complete with artificial lake.

The committee, interrupted by the election campaign, will check into Bilbo's relations with war contractors soon after the election, it was learned in Washington. The Klansman may have to talk fast to explain assertions that he used his Senate office to get contracts for his friends, who in turn remodeled Bilbo's Poplarville, Miss., estate as a Christmas present in 1941.

D. C. VOTES FOR RIGHT TO VOTE

RESIDENTS of the nation's capital, who have been denied the right to vote since 1878, this week rolled up 7-3 and 6-1 margins respectively for home rule and national representation in an informal plebiscite.

Total registration of voteless Washington, D. C. electors exceeded 169,000, comparing favorably with a 95,000 turnout in 1938, when a similar poll was held.

One of the major issues in the drive for self-government—the fact that Sen. Theodore G. Bilbo (D. Miss.) has been "mayor" of the nation's capital—was eliminated in the GOP sweep.

With the Republicans controlling both Senate and House, the admitted member of the Ku Klux Klan will lose his chairmanship of the Senate District Committee.

SCRIPTO UNFAIR, SAYS STEEL UNION

Director W. H. Crawford of District 35, CIO Steelworkers, this week asked organized labor to place the Scripto Mfg. Co., Atlanta, Ga., manufacturer of mechanical pens and pencils, on the unfair list.

The employes went on strike a month ago, asking for a decent living wage, an eight-hour day, vacations with pay, union security and reinstatement of a discharged local union officer.

A reactionary police force, which Drew Pearson says has a number of members of the Ku Klux Klan, is giving all possible aid to the company in breaking the strike. Unions placing the firm on the unfair list should write the company at 423 Houston St., NE, Atlanta, Ga.

MURRAY URGES:

UNITY TO WIN BETTER STANDARD OF LIVING

CIO President Philip Murray and the press prior to opening of 8th CIO Convention at Atlantic City. Murray in the wage section of his convention report, says: "The firm unity within the CIO, backed by the determination of our membership to protect their living standards in the interest of the entire nation, will result in the same success in the coming months as we achieved during the past winter." (Highlights of report—pages 5 to 12).

CIO CONVENTION OPENS AT ATLANTIC CITY

(Highlights of Pres. Murray's Report—Pages 5-12)

A program dedicated to the advancement of all American workers' living standards and to cooperation with unionists abroad to maintain a peaceful world was presented to the 8th Convention of CIO at Atlantic City this week by Pres. Philip Murray.

The convention, meeting during the week of Nov. 18 at the Chelsea Hotel, will hear several prominent speakers — among them Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, U. S. chief of staff; Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach; Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Leon Jouhaux, vice-president of the World Federation of Trade Unions; and Rabbi Stephen Wise of N. Y. City.

Whitney will speak Nov. 19, Gen. Eisenhower and Rabbi Wise on the 20th, and Jouhaux and Schwellenbach on the 21st.

PRES. MURRAY, in his report, stressed the fact that the CIO was created to organize the unorganized and that "such work must never stop."

Reviewing CIO unions' successful fights for wage increases last winter and spring, Murray said:

"Neither the American workers nor the American people as a whole can accept the fallacious concept that an increase in the American standard of living is undesirable.

"Neither the American workers nor the American people as a whole can accept the fallacious notion that profiteers must be accorded ever larger profits, that prices must be permitted to go even higher, that real wages must be permitted to fall even lower, that the American people must suffer even more severe strains on their budgets, and that all of this is necessary for the health of our economy."

Murray referred only by inference to AFL criticisms of CIO's wage fight. He said:

"To the rank and file of American workers the wailings and underhanded attacks of a few leaders of labor outside of the CIO, strike a sharp contrast with the leadership provided by the CIO in this all-important struggle to protect the standard of living of the American people."

ON international affairs, Murray cited the formation and growth of the World Federation of Trade Unions, to which CIO is affiliated, and added:

"Throughout the world the CIO is endeavoring to promote friendships between peoples based on mutual understanding, human rights and respect for the right of each people to work for its own improvement according to its own traditions and circumstances."

At an Executive Board meeting prior to the Convention, Murray announced the chairmanship of nine Convention committees:

Constitution—Frank Rosenblum, CIO vice-president.

Credentials—Allan S. Haywood. CIO director of organization and vice-president.

Research and Education—Kermit Eby, CIO director of research and education.

Rules—William Pollock, secretary-treasurer, Textile Workers.

IT'S A LIE!

By MARTY SOLOW

IN THE World-Telegram, New York outlet of Press Lord Roy Howard, a recent editorial praised the formation of American Action, Inc., referring to it as a "concentrated, organized effort of sound Americans everywhere."

The World-Telegram forgot that on March 13 Eugene Segal, in a series written for the Howard chain of papers, said that American Action is "a new nationalist movement led by old hands in the business of fomenting political and economic dissension . . . in the U. S."

The editorial also failed to disclose that this new 1,000 per cent patriotic group contained such sponsors as Merwin K. Hart, a Franco propagandist.

Neither did the Telegram state that the group was financed by reactionary businessmen such as Sun Oil magnate Joe Pew, the violently anti-labor steel baron, Ernest T. Weir, and Col. Robert R. McCormick, Midwest publisher whose Chicago Tribune was a source of comfort to Adolph Hitler as our armies cut through Nazi Germany.

GEORGE SELDES' weekly In Fact points out a prime example of press fakery in the October 21 issue. Says Seldes: "The press front-paged the news that the great A&P food chain had been found guilty of monopoly.

"During the trial it had been testified that the housewives of America had been cheated of $21,714,000 by the A&P through short weights, overcharges and price boosting. This news was almost totally suppressed.

"The explanation is known to everyone in the business. The Monopoly news on page 1 would not drive away a single A&P customer. But the news of cheating housewives would offend A&P, might lose advertising money."

* * *

REMEMBER when America's gutter press splashed headlines across front pages last winter about a so-called plot afoot involving "reds" and "foreigners" who were trying to swipe the atom bomb?

Well, there's no plot! Those front-page stories about spies were strictly phony. Here's the proof, which was buried deep inside the New York Times on Oct. 23:

"WASHINGTON, Oct. 23 (UP)—John S. Wood of the House Committee on un-American Activities said today that a year's investigation had failed to bring to light any evidence of a foreign atom bomb spying at work in this country." Most of the press gave the story similar treatment or failed to run it.

FISHERMEN WIN RAISE

The CIO Fishermen & Allied Workers signed contracts this week with two firms in the Bodega bay area, near San Francisco, increasing prices to be paid fishermen for fish and crabs. The exact amount of the raise was not made public.

Some 800 boat crews from Santa Cruz to Crescent City struck Nov. 1 for a new agreement. The Northern California Fisheries Assn. refused to negotiate until federal courts decided whether negotiations to raise prices would be construed as conspiracy in restraint of trade

Aimed at Security

BALL IN DRIVE TO PARALYZE UNIONS

A shrewdly organized plan, designed to appeal to many well-meaning people, has been put forward by Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.) in an effort to weaken drastically the power of unions to bargain for a better standard of living.

1. Prohibit industry-wide bargaining, striking at the heart of the big industrial unions, like Steel, Auto and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

2. Outlaw union security by forbidding the union shop. Ball's suggestion is that non-union members would pay a "pro-rata" share in organized shops, with their dues reduced by the amount ordinarily set aside for payment to the national union with which each local is affiliated. This, of course, would weaken the national union's work with Congress, its publication and research departments, etc.

3. Pass the Case Bill, which would water down the Wagner Act, repeal the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act, and permit wide-spread suits against unions in federal courts. President Truman vetoed this bill in the last session of Congress.

Ball's plan is to abolish the Wagner Act entirely, he said at a press conference, and to force unions into endless and costly legal tangles.

"The sooner we abolish the Natl. Labor Relations Board entirely, and write a statute to permit anyone whose rights are affected to go into court directly, the better off we'll be," he declared.

Ball's proposal for bargaining shop by shop instead of on an industry basis would, if adopted, lead to time-consuming negotiations that would slow up production. In the thousands of shops covered by both CIO industrial union contracts and the craft contracts of the AFL, local labor and management representatives would wrangle piecemeal over problems that could be settled much more easily by national bargaining conferences.

Relationships on an industry-wide basis that have achieved stability would be disrupted, and shop by shop the bargainers would have to work out confused agreements that would vary widely in pattern.

NO MOON—NOT EVEN A DECENT LIVING!

Big problem facing the American people is the fact that a tiny minority can afford $10,000 fur coats (see ad reproduced above) while half of all American families have incomes of less than $2,000 a year—sufficient only for bare living in a period of inflated prices. An average industrial worker making a little less than $45 a week would have to work 222 weeks to buy a $10,000 fur coat—if none of his wages went for taxes and if he did not have to pay for food or rent. CIO Pres. Murray's Convention report warns that sharply rising prices will lead to a drop in consumer demand and the boom will go bust.

GIRDING FOR BATTLES AHEAD

THE CIO convention meets in Atlantic City two weeks after national elections which have given a sharp setback to the progressive forces.

It has to map its strategy to meet threatened onslaughts from an increased reactionary majority in Congress.

No sooner were the elections over than these reactionaries began to reveal a program which they were careful to conceal from the voters before.

It includes a drive for open-shop legislation, for revision of the Wagner act and for other devices to hamstring the unions.

It includes a tightened blockade against progressive social legislation, free rein for profiteering, and tax relief for the rich at the expense of the poor.

★ ★ ★

AT THE same time, there are many signs of a coming depression, whose advent will be hastened by the Hooveristic policies of the victorious tories.

Inventories of manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers have reached an all-time high of $31,200,000,000.

Much of this withholding of needed goods is hoarding for higher prices. But the Commerce Dept. issues this warning:

"In the past . . . periods of rapid inventory accumulation have been followed by periods of declining production, declining employment and lowered income. . . .

"There is the further danger that once the business pipelines are filled, the increase in inventories may shift quickly from a voluntary to an involuntary accumulation because buying slackens or increases less than anticipated."

★ ★ ★

THERE IS evidence a-plenty of declining purchasing power already.

The lid has been taken off prices, which even before were soaring out of reach of most lower-income people.

The average weekly wages of factory workers dropped from $47.12 to $44.61 between April 1945 and August 1946, while the consumer price index of the Labor Dept. rose 13%. This represents a decline of 16.4% in their purchasing power.

At the same time, the total monthly payroll of manufacturing industries has dropped 22%—which, adjusted to the rise in prices, represents a 31% drop in payrolls.

A Federal Reserve Board report shows that 70% of American families early this year earned less than $3000 a year and 47% less than $2000.

As to savings, government reports have shown these are held by a small minority of well-to-do families, while the great majority have little or none to spend.

★ ★ ★

AGAINST political reaction, the CIO has already begun to fight back.

Along with other liberal groups, it is planning a Conference of Progressives in January to mobilize an effective coalition in support of progressives in Congress and to prepare for future elections.

The CIO convention will undoubtedly plan to increase its legislative and PAC activities, and to throw all its weight behind the campaign to defend the people from the onslaughts of reaction.

ON THE individual field, the CIO convention confronts the emergency of lowered real wages. These must be raised, not only to protect the workers' living standards, but also to create the mass purchasing power necessary to ward off depression.

This calls for expanded organizing activities; for building the strength and unity of the CIO unions; and for aggressive and intelligently-planned wage movements.

The battles ahead are not only for labor but for the welfare of the whole American people—against lowered living standards, against reactionary legislation and against depression.

On its record, the CIO is the movement to lead this people's fight. It must not and will not fail.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

AT ELEVEN years of age, the CIO is not an old nor even a middle-aged movement. But it is old enough to look back on quite a chunk of history and achievement.

Any youngster feels he has reached quite a ripe maturity at 11. It is a self-confident age.

He can look back on having survived most of the childhood illnesses, on having grown from a baby into a big fellow, on having learned to stand up for himself outside the home and to fight if necessary

At the same time, the 11-year-old is not inclined to be reminiscent or introspective. It is a very active age.

On the threshold of young-manhood, he looks forward to his period of greatest growth and development. His mind dwells constantly on the problems and achievements ahead.

★ ★ ★

THESE REFLECTIONS are prompted by the CIO convention in Atlantic City, in the same Chelsea Hotel auditorium that witnessed the birth pangs of the CIO eleven years ago.

In October 1935, the aging AFL held its convention in this hall.

Day after day, and far into the night, this hall resounded to one of the most important debates in labor history—between the advocates of industrial organization, on the one hand, and the craft stand-patters, on the other.

In the final vote, the old guard won a battle but lost the war. For, immediately after, the industrial unionists met and decided to form the Committee for Industrial Organization.

A FEW months later, in 1936, the CIO launched its great organizing campaigns in steel, autos, rubber and other industries.

In 1937, most of the biggest companies signed CIO agreements, despite the last-ditch resistance of the "Little Steel" strike.

In 1938, the CIO had to meet a new problem, a depression which threw millions of workers out of employment.

It maintained its strength by developing a militant program to serve the jobless, and was ready for new gains in membership when the upswing began in 1939.

In 1940, another critical convention was held in the same Atlantic City hall. John L. Lewis resigned the presidency of the CIO, then torn with the growing pains of internal dissension, and Philip Murray took over.

BETWEEN 1940 and 1946, under Murray's leadership, the CIO has registered its greatest growth in membership, unity, strength and stability. It has expanded into countless new fields of usefulness.

The CIO proved its patriotic metal in the world war. It came through the difficult period of cutbacks and reconversion with flying colors. Its Political Action Committee became the rallying point for all progressives. It led the greatest and most successful wage movement in American history.

In this period, the CIO helped form the World Federation of Trade Unions. It launched its Southern organization drive.

A glance through President Murray's report to the 1946 convention will show the tremendous scope and influence of this still-young labor movement that battles on every field for the welfare of the working and common people.

It is now so strong and well-established that it does not fear destruction by enemies who once threatened its very existence. It has proved again and again that, so long as it maintains its own unity and progressive purposefulness, no outside foe can lick it.

But still, the CIO does not underestimate the difficulties ahead.

The victory of reaction at the polls has greatly increased the tory majority in Congress A legislative drive against labor is threatened. The gains of the New Deal are in danger.

While Congressional reaction offers its services to the profiteers against the workers, the unions face the sternest fight ahead to raise wages whose purchasing power has been deeply slashed by price increases.

The CIO will need all its proven strength, all its internal unity and all its progressive initiative to win the coming struggle with wage-cutting anti-labor reaction.

Vol. 9 November 18, 1946 No. 47

'We began in the face of bitter opposition from within the existing labor movement and a determination on the part of powerful industrial forces that unions must not be built in mass production industries . . . in 10 short years the CIO has become an integral part of our nation . . . That a dynamic labor movement could be built during this most trying decade is little short of miraculous.'

'AN INTEGRAL PART OF OUR NATION'

Highlights of President Murray's Report—Pages 5 to 12

NOVEMBER, 1935 marked a new era in American labor history with the formation of CIO and the growth of its dynamic unions, Pres. Philip Murray said in the introduction to his convention report. And 11 years later, meeting at the place of its birth, CIO gives "consideration not only to the problems, needs and desires of the members of our organization and their families, but also to the problems of our great and beloved America."

CIO was steeled in struggles that accompanied the vast organizing campaigns of the pre-war years. "As the war clouds gathered in Europe, production picked up and men and women flocked to our ranks." Then came Pearl Harbor.

"Members of CIO unions toiled in the mines, mills and factories of America to turn out the weapons for the free peoples of the World. We met the challenge of the dictator nations. No matter how often we were called upon to do more and more, our members ground out the infinite varities of paraphernalia which eventually drove the forces of Naziism and Fascism into galling defeat."

The CIO, Pres. Murray said, "is of America and for America in concept, philosophy and conduct. It stands for the preservation of the American democratic way of life."

CITING CIO'S legislative battle to improve the life of the people, Pres. Murray said that it is a "brillant achievement." The wage adjustments won have proved reasonable, he declared, and well within the scope of industry to pay without inflationary price increases. But despite the CIO's efforts to the contrary, the cost of living has continued upward.

CIO is not quarreling with business, Pres. Murray pointed out. Business should secure from its investment a reasonable profit, he said adding that, "We believe that out of the benefits which flow from increased productivity and increased efficiency the workers should be assured of a larger proportion of the financial emoluments which ensue."

Decent Wages Help Build Sound Citizens

TO PREVENT ANOTHER DEPRESSION

IF we are to avoid a serious depression with its high level of unemployment and mass starvation, it is necessary that the following action be taken as soon as possible, says Pres. Murray's report to the CIO Convention.

1. Reinstitution of controls to effect a steady, free flow of materials necessary for production. This requires an allocation and priority system.

2. Establishment of inventory controls to prevent hoarding of materials.

3. A firm price control plan to force absorption of increased costs through profits, higher production levels and rising productivity .

4. A tax program to discourage hoarding, price rises and higher profits: (a) an excess profits tax; (b) a stronger and more easily enforced capital gains tax at a higher rate than the current 25%; (c) repeal of the carry-back, carry-forward provisions of the tax law.

"As a long-range program," says the report, "we must go even further. Full production, full employment and full utilization of our economic and natural resources must be our continuous goal."

FOR A BETTER AMERICA

CAN industry afford to raise American living standards? The answer, says Pres. Murray's report to the CIO Convention, is simple:

"Corporate profits after taxes, in 1945, were $5 billion higher than in the pre-war years 1936-39, and the Dept. of Commerce reports that profits in 1946, after taxes, will be even higher. Recent corporate profit reports for the first half of 1946, according to the Federal Reserve Board, indicated that the predictions of the Dept. of Commerce for 1945 are going to be true. For example, in the second quarter of 1946, the Federal Reserve Board reports that 629 corporations earned $601 million or an annual rate of $2 billion 400 million. This is 33% higher than the average profits, after taxes, for the years 1942-45."

Productivity—which leads to higher profits—also is on the rise, Pres. Murray points out. " The Federal Reserve Board reports that in the 'majority of industries, productivity is today higher than before the war'. The Federal Reserve Board attributes this increase to "the currently higher rates of plant and equipment utilization and also because of war and postwar improvements in plant and equipment.' "

WHAT, in contrast, has happened to the earnings of the average consumer? Pres. Murray's report says that workers' weekly wages in manufacturing industries have declined from a level of $47.12 in April 1945 to $44.61 in August 1946. Sharply rising prices in this period have cut this wage 16.4% in terms of purchasing power. The $44.61 will buy ony $39.40 worth of merchandise in terms of April 1945 dollars.

Added to this is a 22% drop in the actual monthly payroll of manufacturing workers between April 1945 and July 1946. And when this decline is corrected for the rise in prices, it amounts to a payroll cut of 31%.

"In terms of real purchasing power which is going to sustain our current high levels of production and employment, it is obvious that this declining consumer income cannot support our present economy," Pres. Murray declares.

"Not only workers' weekly wages in manfacturing industries have declined, but the total national pay envelope is shrinking," he points out. "Between 1945 and 1946, total income payments have dropped only $3 billion, but the annual rate of payments in wages and salaries has declined $10 billion. On the other hand, payments in dividends and interest and business income have been on the increase."

Citing history, Murray debunks the theory that wage increases "forced" price increases. "Between 1923 and 1940," he says, "average hourly earnings increased by more than 26% while wholesale prices of finished goods in manufacturing industries were dropping 18%. Furthermore, in spite of lower prices and higher wages, corporate profits after taxes were actually 19% higher in 1940 than in 1923."

Calling for an economy functioning on the basis of rising wages and lowering prices, Pres. Murray says:

"The true welfare of the nation calls for a program which will produce not a constant depression of wage rates but an ever-rising level of real earnings for the people as a whole. This objective can be achieved only through an honest and complete return to true bona fide collective bargaining between management and labor on all matters, including wages, together with effective control by government over profiteers to protect the American people against the continued inflationary rise of the cost of living."

ORGANIZING, NO. 1 JOB

TRUE to the aims of its founders, the CIO in the past two years since the last convention has continued its militant drive to organize the unorganized.

While Labor Board elections, as Pres. Murray's report points out, "do not tell the whole story, the two-year record of CIO unions in these tests cannot be discounted."

During the two-year period ending June 30, 1946, CIO unions won 3,856 elections and polled a total of 613,936 votes, the report states. But that is only part of the story.

Pres. Murray also reported the addition of "two international unions to the CIO family." They are the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal & Soft Drink Workers and the Amalgamated Lithographers, with a total of 80,000 members.

The CIO, the report continues, also granted charters to the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, which became the Utility Workers Union, and the Paper Workers Organizing Committee, which is now the United Paper Workers.

During the two-year period, the Organizing Dept., under the direction of Allan S. Haywood, "has greatly expanded its activities" with the assistance of 34 regional directors, two of them paid by affiliated unions; five regional sub-directors; 67 field directors directly assigned to the CIO; 54 field representatives paid by the CIO but assigned to affiliated unions, and 10 officers of affiliated unions paid by the CIO.

ANOTHER big chapter in the story of CIO progress is the CIO organizing Committee, set up by the CIO executive board at its March, 1946, meeting to conduct an organizing campaign in the South.

Van A. Bittner was chosen as national director of the committee, and Haywood heads the advisory committee. The campaign, Pres. Murray reported, embraces Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Kentucky and the Kanawha Valley section of West Virginia.

At the time Pres. Murray prepared his report, there had been 174 elections of which the CIO had won 150 and lost 24, and 236 petitions for elections were pending before the NLRB.

PRES. Murray reported that the CIO now includes 40 international and national unions; 396 industrial unions, and 280 industrial union councils. Since the last convention 182 certificates of affiliation were issued to local industrial unions, and 34 to industrial union councils.

Highlights in organizational activities of the various CIO international unions include:

- The Steelworkers are to the fore, with 2,044 locals as compared to 1,850 in 1944; a membership of 853,408 including 61,200 ordinarily exonerated members but not including 66,900 members in the U. S. and Canadian armed forces.
- The Auto Workers reported a membership of 1,051,455 for the period ending June 30, 1944. The figure dropped after V-E and V-J Days, but is rising again.
- The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers have 1,375 plants under contract; 323,572 new members joined during the period 1944-46. UE was victorious in 450 NLRB elections covering 99,890 workers during the past two years.
- The membership of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers increased by approximately 25,000 since the last CIO convention, and 58 new affiliates were chartered, making a combined total of 496 local unions and 29 joint boards in the U. S. and Canada.
- The Textile Workers between 1943 and 1946 signed 436 new contracts covering 101,976 workers, won collective bargaining agreements in 67 other mills covering 18,240 workers, and made greatest gains in the cotton-rayon textile industry.

THE 79th CONGRESS—'NEGLECT'

THE 79th Congress had a golden opportunity to act in the people's interest. It failed to do so. The legislation which it killed or failed to act upon reads like a Who's Who of the program of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"To meet the economic emergency in the immediate postwar months, CIO supported a number of needed measures. Virtually every one met with violent death in Congress," Pres. Murray reported to the CIO convention.

"Just as it killed or neglected every vital measure needed to meet immediate emergency needs, Congress shelved or slashed virtually every important measure needed for charting the long-range course of the country on a sound and progressive basis."

The sections of the President's report listing the necessary legislation which fell by the wayside is a recital of failure to meet the country's obvious needs—a failure which will probably carry over into the 80th Congress as a result of the Republican victory at the polls.

LOOK at the record, as cited by Pres. Murray: Kilgore-Forand bill, for emergency unemployment compensation—"passed by the Senate only in a weakened and battered form, and never got beyond the Ways & Means Committee of the House."

Proposals to keep the U. S. Employment Service under federal control—"fought bitterly and ultimately killed."

65c Minimum Wage Bill—"As a result of . . . parliamentary maneuvering, the nation is today still operating under a minimum wage law which is obsolete in its 40c-per-hour level and in its limited coverage and effectiveness."

Fair Employment Practice Committee—"suppressed in the Rules Committee of the House and filibustered to death on the floor of the Senate."

Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill — "powerful pressure groups . . . were successful in preventing . . . action in the House."

The Hook Forestry Bill to stimulate output and consumption—not "permitted to make any progress in this session of Congress."

A progressive tax program—"Congress moved in precisely the opposite direction. The Excess Profits Tax was removed . . . Corporations were permitted . . . to secure enormous refunds out of taxes paid during the war.

ONLY on matters of social security is it possible, Pres. Murray said, to report "at least some slight progress . . . in the improvement of our national system of social security.

The improvements took the form of unemployment compensation for seamen, credits for war veterans for purposes of survivors' benefits, and a few other minor benefits. But the CIO Social Security Committee, headed by Van A. Bittner, has been leading a fight for passage of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill, which would overhaul the entire social security system to eliminate those features which "are now sadly out of date" or which give unsatisfactory protection.

"Our social security system is unworthy of a nation with the economic, social and political blessings and aspirations with which our country is endowed," Murray said, in calling for drastic revision of the entire set-up.

That's the story. It's not a pretty one. It will take tremendous pressure from labor and all the people to get the people's program enacted. The effort must be made to change the course of Congressional refusal to act on matters of tremendous public interest.

SPEARHEAD FO

THE CIO Political Action Committee is "the spearhead of the progressive political movement in America." Thus CIO Pres. Murray stated in his report to the CIO Convention.

"The death of President Roosevelt, the end of the war, the anti-union drive of big industry and the attempts to make the government join in that drive, have combined to make the work of PAC arduous and also essential to the well-being of labor and of the nation," Pres. Murray wrote. "Fortunately the members of the CIO and of the general public have realized the importance of PAC and have rallied to make it increasingly vigorous.

"The death of Sidney Hillman took from PAC its chairman and inspired leader," Murray stated. "This loss to the committee, to the CIO, to the nation and to the world is beyond calculation. His devotion, his energy, his wisdom—his genius—cannot be replaced. Yet, as the CIO Executive Board said eight days later, 'This is the supreme hour for intensification of the work so brilliantly commenced by him.' That is our challange, our opportunity."

MURRAY said that PAC under a new executive board setup with Jack Kroll as director, has worked well with the CIO Legislative Dept. in the mutual task of fighting for progressive legislation. The committee has carried the responsibility of informing members of Congress about CIO's position on legislative proposals, and PAC has concerned itself almost entirely with informing and organizing the CIO membership concerning political issues and techniques. Pres. Murray declared that the Director of CIO Councils, the PAC editorial committee, the CIO Education Dept. and the CIO NEWS "have each contributed materially to PAC publications and correlation of effort" and the Director of Organization "has been of great help in tying PAC in to the CIO organization".

PAC, Murray continued, "continues to lead the field with its attractive publications informing CIO membership and the public about issues and candidates". During 1945-46 2,770,000 copies of 16 illustrated, two-color PAC pamphlets were distributed. Seventeen small cartoon leaflets were issued in quantities totalling 25 million copies. Ten thousand additional copies of the book, "The First Round", have been sold and 128,000 copies of seven colored posters illustrating the issues in "The Second Round" have been issued. The PAC News Service released stories for the labor, Negro and foreign language press as well as servicing daily publications.

Much attention has been paid to radio. Over 5,000 radio scripts have been prepared, Pres. Murray reported, and many transcriptions of spot announcements on registration and political issues have been distributed to the field.

PRES. MURRAY'S report, which was in print prior to the general election, reviewed PAC successes in the primaries. "The results," Murray stated, "were amazingly successful. In most of the 31 victories won in the primaries, it is clear that PAC played a substantial role. In fact, its part was decisive in many instances. In every case, however, it was helped by other liberal groups, such as other labor unions, Negro groups, church and liberal leaders. By pulling together, the progressives have already piled up a significant victory."

FACTORY-BUILT HOMES—THE NEED

A STRONG demand for factory-built homes as the only method of licking the nation's increasingly severe housing crisis was made by Pres. Murray in his report to the CIO convention.

"It appears that the government's housing program is pointed daily in the direction of industrially-built houses for the workers and veterans of the nation," Murray said. "The full support of the CIO in the furtherance of the industrial housing program has been pledged to Mr. Wilson Wyatt (the Natl. Housing Administrator).

"We are convinced that only through the industrialization of the housing-building segment of our economy can the needs of veteran and non-veteran be met.

"The CIO agrees fully with Mr. Wyatt that as we were able in this country to achieve a monthly production of 50,000 aircraft as called for by the late President Roosevelt, we can with the same productive genius realize our objective of providing decent homes and better communities for our people in line with American standards of decency and human dignity."

THE issue of factory-built homes is particularly important at this time, since the RFC has so far refused to give a loan and facilities to 11 companies seeking to enter the field. Back of that opposition is the power of the nation's real estate lobby—which, as Pres. Murray noted in his report, has been attacking every phase of the government's housing program.

Much of the housing section of the report was a lugubrious "I told you so" based on CIO predictions of the result of lifting price controls and restrictions on non-priority building.

"A mad scramble followed for what limited materials were available, with commercial contractors and builders of high-priced residences usually getting there first because they were willing to pay higher prices . . . The end result of this chain of events," Murray said, "was a complete paralysis of the small or moderate home construction industry."

THE CIO Housing Committee, headed by Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO, has adopted a far-reaching program to provide homes for the nation, the CIO President noted, and has given full support to the "excellent program" of Housing Administrator Wyatt.

Have the goals been met? No, says CIO, and "Mr. Wyatt would be the first to admit this." The reasons are obvious, Pres. Murray declared.

"We all remember vividly the manner in which a reactionary Congress, spurred on by the powerful real estate lobby, emasculated the so-called Patman Emergency Veterans Housing Bill, thereby blasting the hopes of millions of homeless veterans for a decent place in which to live, within the reach of their pocketbooks . . .

"We remember the jubilation of the real estate lobby over the inadequacy of this needed legislation . . .

"We remember, too, the alliance between reactionary House Republicans and their southern counterparts, whose efforts successfully kept the vital Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill bottled up" in committee.

PRES. MURRAY quoted Wyatt as charging that the fight against the Wagner-Ellender-Taft and Patman bills—both necessary to break the housing bottleneck—was "one of the most shameful campaigns waged in this country by the powerful real estate lobby . . . It is amazing that the newspapers generally have overlooked the under-cover legislative battle."

CIO, which constituted one of the strongest forces in support of the two bills, sought desperately to secure passage of the W-E-T bill before Congress adjourned last summer, and has called upon President Truman to call a special session of Congress in order to get it passed.

Despite failure of the W-E-T bill to pass, and of the crippling of price controls, CIO will press for action to meet the housing needs of the American people.

79th CONGRESS SCUTTLED THE PEOPLE'S NEEDS

THE 79th Congress, which adopted a "should have stood in bed" attitude towards progressive legislation, had an eager-beaver outlook when it came to laws aimed at curbing labor's rights.

Pres. Murray's report to the CIO convention, casting a dolorous eye backwards on the record of the 79th, noted the enthusiasm with which Congress directed itself to "fighting against and attempting to cripple" the American labor movement.

The CIO leader declared that it was "unavoidable" that a Congress so intent on halting all forward-looking legislative proposals and which "fought against the needs of the American people on so many other issues," would turn its attention to attacking labor.

"In this session of Congress a series of anti-labor bills, almost unprecedented in quantity and viciousness, were pressed and prodded at every point by the same groups who were so reluctant to act along constructive lines in other fields," Murray charged.

He cited the Hobbs Bill, the May-Arends Bill, the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bills, the Case Bill, and the President's labor draft bill and a "host of others." Their purpose, the report declared, was to:

- "Revise the basic principles of the National Labor Relations Act;
- "Establish crippling restrictions on labor activities, on the right to strike, on the union shop and on labor organizations generally;
- "Impose compulsory arbitration;
- "Deprive labor of the right to any political voice;
- "Impose on unions devastating penalties for minor offenses." In contrast to its casual approach to many pressing problems, Congress pushed many of the anti-labor proposals through to floor action, Pres. Murray's report noted.

Even the President "permitted himself to be drawn into the drive for the enactment of measures designed to suppress labor," the CIO report declared. It cited his request for compulsory cooling off periods and for fact-finding boards in all disputes.

"Subsequently," the report said, "in a heated and thoroughly unjustified attack upon the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the President called for the enactment of a labor draft measure designed to impose economic slavery upon workers who might engage in certain types of strikes . . .

"It is a significant commentary on the activities of this session of Congress that a proposal so directly contrary to basic American principles as that embodied in the President's labor draft bill was shouted to passage in the House within an hour after the President's request, without any opportunity for analysis or debate, and, indeed, at a time when there were not even enough copies of the proposed bill available for general distribution among the members of Congress."

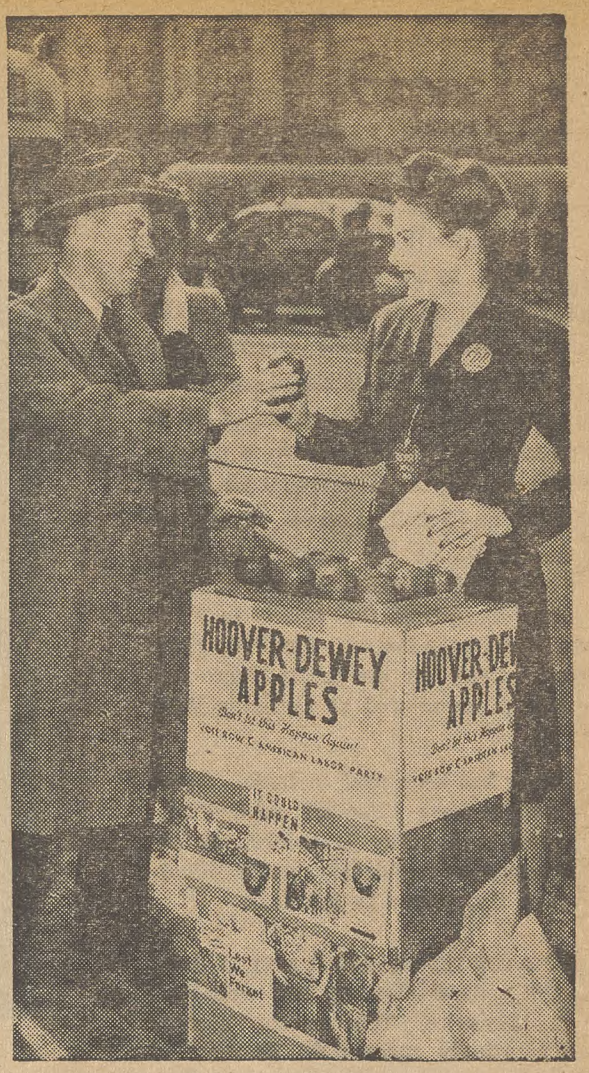
WHAT to do to halt this stream of anti-labor bills, which are sure to be a problem of an even more serious nature when the 80th Congress convenes early in 1947?

The Legislative Department of CIO, headed by Nathan Cowan, has "always emphasized" that the votes and attitudes of Congressmen are not determined by conversations with the Washington representatives of the unions.

The real influence, Pres. Murray said, comes from the manner in which union members, their friends and families back home, make their sentiments known. To promote that rank-and-file influence, the CIO President pointed out, "is a job for every national union, every local union and every industrial union council."

Out of the 79th Congress came a new method of sniping at labor, Pres. Murray declared—the strategy of tying anti-union proposals to other bills.

Thus the NLRB Appropriations Bill carried the Frey craft-union rider, as well as a section barring Wagner Act benefits to many agricultural-industry workers. And almost every government department received its appropriation with a rider barring the payment of wages to employes who are



It Could Happen Again!

MANY of the new laws have not yet been subjected to court tests, but throughout the country the CIO has initiated legal actions which have caused state legislation to be thrown out by the judges. The number of these vicious bills so removed from circulation is impressive.

Included are a Colorado state law requiring unions to incorporate; a Texas law that sought to force union organizers from addressing mass meetings without a permit; a Florida law regulating who could be elected to union positions; and a host of other state and local ordinances aimed at harassing unions by forcing the payment of fees or the acquiring of licenses for all sorts of activities.

State laws which have not yet been tested, according to CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman, are those which prohibit union security clauses in contracts.

Test suits involving the provisions on this subject which were inserted into the constitutions of Florida and Arkansas "will be tested by court action," Murray predicted.

THE report noted that bills set up in past years to protect labor's rights were being widely disregarded by judges in many states during the big strikes early in 1946.

Thus, "the courts frequently trampled on these laws (in Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey) in their haste to crush strikes," Murray declared. "Labor's experience with the injunction during the 1946 strikes should make every union member aware that the injunction evil is still with us."

The solution, it was suggested, is three-fold: to place strong anti-injunction laws on the books; to secure political and legislative action preventing the judges from over-riding these laws at the behest of anti-union corporations; and to win the election of judges "who will make it clear that their doors are not open to every anti-union employer who needs an injunction to break a strike."

231 CIO COUNCILS ACTIVE

ACTIVITIES OF the Dept. of Industrial Union Councils, headed by Director John Brophy, have been greatly extended during the past two years. The CIO now has a total of 231 state, city and county councils, 36 of which are state bodies.

Fields in which these Councils now function include political action, legislation, public relations, education, community services, housing, health, race relations and economic and social planning, in addition to assistance to unions and regional directors in organizing and collective bargaining.

On questions concerning foreign affairs, the Department has laid down procedure aimed to aid councils in making public statements on such matters, so that these statements will not conflict with national CIO policy, or be based on faulty information. This precedure requires Councils to submit their views to the Director of Councils for transmission to the executive officers and appropriate CIO agencies dealing with these questions.

AMONG THE important CIO committees with which the Council Department cooperates closely are the Community Services Committee and the Health, Safety & Welfare Committee.

Formerly the Natl. CIO War Relief Committee, the CSC changed its name after the war and extended its services to the home front. During the war the committee contributed more than $100,000,000 to various war relief agencies. This year funds for special projects in 12 countries totalling $2,250,000 were contributed.

In its home-front program, the CSC has set up a union counselling service which functions through CIO councils and locals of various internationals, has engaged in work among servicemen and veterans, and has taken part in community health and welfare work.

THE CIO Committee on Health, Safety & Welfare, headed by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, has directed its activities to problems of workers in industry, maintaining that labor is entitled to equal voice with management in health and safety.

In the course of its activities, the Committee reports that it has found a growing trend in favor of the establishment of a Federal Dept. of Education, Health & Welfare headed by a secretary of cabinet rank.

NO DISCRIMINATION—A BASIC CIO PRINCIPLE

ONE OF THE bedrock principles of the CIO is its policy of no discrimination — equal rights for all.

In listing its four main objectives, the CIO Constitution states that the first one is: "To bring about the effective organization of the working men and women of America regardless of race, creed, color or nationality, and to unite them for common action into labor unions for their mutual aid and protection."

To further this policy the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination was created to help educate CIO members concerning the evils of discrimination and to give active aid in cases of violation.

The committee's activities in various communities and its influence exerted on government agencies have aided in the development of a clearer realization of the economic wisdom and justice of this policy. At the London Labor Conference, forerunner of the World Federation of Trade Unions, the CIO delegation was instrumental in extending the principle of anti-discrimination to the WFTU charter.

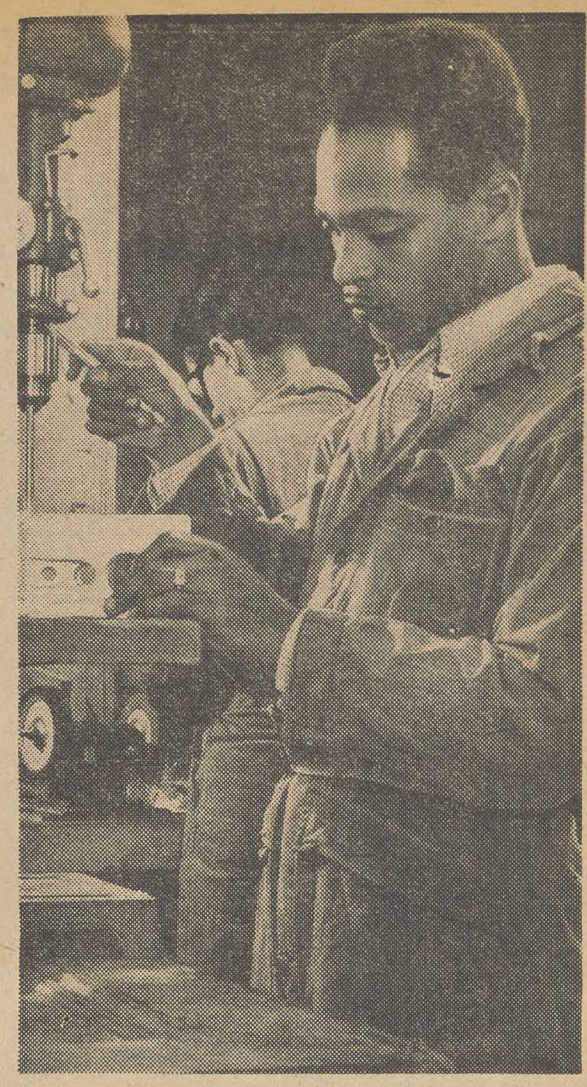
Since V-J Day, there have been 26 known lynchings, and numerous cases of mob violence and policy brutality against Negroes and union organizers. The CIO executive board at its meeting on March 15, 1946, passed a resolution calling attention to these developments and pointing out their dangerous implications to organized labor.

In line with this resolution, the CIO committee participated directly on two national committees organized to arouse the American public to the dangers inherent in substituting mob violence for due process of law. These were the Nat. Committee to Secure Justice in Columbia, Tenn., and the Nat. Committee to Combat Mob Violence, formed under the chairmanship of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Arthur Spingarn, and composed of representatives from the principal organizations active in the promotion of civil rights and racial tolerance.

The CIO Committee to Adolish Discrimination is headed by Sec.-Treas. Carey. Pres. Willard Townsend, United Transport Service Employes, is secretary, and George L-P Weaver is director.

FAILURE of Congress to pass legislation in 1946 making the Fair Employment Practices Committee permanent ended the work of the FEPC on June 30, 1946, although the need for governmental enforcement of anti-discrimination policies is still as great in the postwar period as it was during the war.

The experience gained during the functioning of the FEPC showed unquestionably that with the aid of such action the established patterns of discrimination in industry could be changed.



For Equal Rights For All

A SQUARE DEAL FOR VETERANS

IMPORTANCE of the work of the CIO Veterans Committee is underlined in President Murray's report which states: "Approximately 20% of our membership today, excluding those still in uniform, are veterans."

The CIO Veterans Committee, which was set up by the 1944 convention to aid the veterans, is headed by Clinton S. Golden of the CIO Steelworkers. Meyer Bernstein of the Steelworkers, upon his discharge from the Army in Sept., 1945, took over the job of CIO Veterans Representative.

As the result of the fight waged by the Shipbuilding Workers and the CIO, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled against super-seniority under which some employers and Selective Service Director Hershey sought to give veterans absolute job rights regardless of length of service.

In order to establish vacation rights for veterans so that they should be given credit for time spent in the service, the CIO has been compelled to go to court, Pres. Murray reported.

ON the veterans' legislative front, Pres. Murray's report states that the CIO Veterans Committee was most active in obtaining the Dec., 1945, amendment to the GI Bill of Rights increasing benefits and coverage. The committee also has inaugurated a campaign to change a recently enacted GI Bill amendment which limits subsistence allowances to veterans taking on-the-job training to $175 a month without dependents and $200 a month with dependents.

The Veterans Committee also was active in securing passage of legislation which provides that ex-GIs are paid for furlough time which they did not receive; social security credit of $160 a month for each month in service and payment of lump sums to their survivors if the ex-servicemen die three years after discharge; and improvement of national service life insurance.

Pres. Murray pointed out that the CIO does not sponsor any particular veterans' organization.

Executive Bureau, World Federation Of Trade Unions

A POWERFUL FORCE IN WORLD AFFAIRS

THE CIO has gone a long way during the past two years to become a powerful force in world affairs.

Through participation in the powerful World Federation of Trade Unions, through its Latin-American Affairs Committee and through increasingly close ties with labor organizations in almost every country, CIO has shaken off the "isolationism" that for years characterized American labor.

Reporting to the eighth CIO convention, Pres. Murray traced in detail the steps which the organization has taken to develop these ties with workers' groups in every section of the world. It is an impressive recital.

At the same time he attacked the Administration's decision to give the AFL sole voting representation in the Intl. Labor Office, the tripartite organization of government, management and labor spokesmen created by the Treaty of Versailles and now incorporated into the United Nations structure.

CIO at no time desired or intended to enter a contest for supremacy with the AFL in ILO affairs, Murray said, but when the administration bowed to AFL pressure for a monopoly labor voice, CIO leaders could see "no further utility" in attending ILO meetings as "advisors" or as specialists on problems of the mass production industries.

THE WFTU will serve as a more than adequate center for CIO's international activities, the report stated, since it is a "far more effective and meaningful medium" for international labor work.

"This organization (the World Federation of Trade Unions), representing as it does some 70 million workers throughout the world and including as it does within its fold every single major labor organization in the entire world with the sole exception of the American Federation of Labor, is far more significant as a forum for the exchange of views, information and cooperative action among the workers' organizations throughout the world," Murray noted.

CIO's influence in Latin America has been enhanced by the publication of "highly successful bulletins and pamphlets" in English and Spanish, the CIO president said in discussing the work of the Latin-American Affairs Committee, which is headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

SO greatly has CIO's international affairs activity increased in the past two years, Murray said, that he had found it necessary to create a special department—headed by Michael Ross—to handle relations with other labor groups and with the United Nations.

The report recalled the work of CIO representatives in helping form the World Federation of Trade Unions during the course of international meetings held throughout 1944 and 1945 at London, Paris, Washington and San Francisco.

"Despite its youth and the fact that it had to organize itself amid the difficulties of post-war Europe, the influence of the WFTU has already begun to be felt in world developments," the CIO President asserted.

Murray noted Adolph Germer has been assigned to work at WFTU headquarters in Paris; various CIO officials have gone on missions to the Far East, Germany and France; and joint committees have been established with labor representatives from Italy, England and the Soviet Union.

RESEARCH AND EDUCATION

ACTIVITIES and publications of the Dept. of Research & Education, headed by Kermit Eby, have been focused on interpreting problems of reconversion to CIO members, indicating possible solutions and assisting unions to win gains through collective bargaining and political action.

The Economic Outlook, the Department's monthly bulletin, and various pamphlets it has issued, have set forth pertinent facts and arguments for higher wages, guaranteed annual wage, 65c minimum wage, health insurance, improved social security, effective price control and other current issues.

In addition to providing information to CIO members, the Department has interpreted the CIO program to the public and its lengthy mailing lists show an ever growing audience.

One of its most popular pamphlets was "The Truth about CIO," which presented a special study of the government and finances of CIO internationals and a brief history, "Ten Years of CIO," issued earlier in the Outlook.

Among Department activities were:

- Wage Research: A committee was set up by action of the CIO Executive Board to prepare information required for coming collective bargaining negotiations. This committee is composed of research directors of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Auto, Electrical, Maritime, Steel and Textile Workers unions.
- Education conferences: Quarterly meetings of education directors of CIO unions were held at CIO headquarters and five regional conferences were held in Chicago, New York, Fort Worth, Tex., Chapel Hill, N. C., and Houston, Tex., to help develop local education programs in cooperation with community groups.
- Films: To help encourage the use of 16mm. sound movies and film strips, the department set up a new film library, and prepared a kit of sound film strip records, and assisted CIO unions in getting equipment, and published discussion guides for specific films.

PRESS, PUBLIC RELATIONS

IN the two years since the last convention, the public relations activities of the CIO, headed by Publicity Director Len De Caux, have been devoted to two general aims:

1. Mobilizing labor support for CIO's post-war program.

2. Counteracting anti-labor propaganda by demonstrating to other sections of the public that the CIO's aims are constructively designed to promote their interests as well as labor's through expanding national prosperity.

Widespread press and radio recognition was given to the effectiveness of the CIO's public relations program, including many articles printed in business and other publications which commented on the modern and popular methods used and noted that "labor tells its story so that all can understand."

The American Public Relations Assn. gave the CIO a special award for "outstanding public relations accomplishments in 1945" in a nation-wide public relations contest entered by some 300 organizations of all kinds.

THE CIO NEWS, weekly newspaper, published in a dozen special union and local editions as well as the national edition, has been increased in popular appeal by the use of picture features, comic strips, humor, women's features and added emphasis generally on human interest. A substantial increase in both individual and group subscriptions shows the popularity of these special efforts to make the paper more interesting.

AN intensified campaign for greater opportunity on the air for labor, including test cases carried before the Federal Communicatons Commission resulted in a more liberal policy on the part of radio broadcasters in general in granting time to labor.

This enabled the CIO to obtain weekly sustaining programs on the three major networks. In addition special CIO broadcasts have been made frequently.

UE, TEXTILE UNION ASK PAY HIKE

THE Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Textile Workers this week both served notice on employers that they are demanding wage increases to meet soaring living costs as a third CIO union, the Packinghouse Workers, voted strike preparations to obtain pay demands.

Two hundred delegates to a UE wage conference at N. Y. City this week declared that wages must be "substantially increased" but that its demands would be coordinated with those of the Steelworkers, the Auto Workers and other large metal working CIO affiliates.

The conference declared that "further soaring prices must mean less food, clothing, fuel and other basic essentials for millions of American citizens," and that "the lowered living standards of the people generally contrast with the greatest profiteering on the part of American corporations in the history of our country."

"American big business" was described as "waging a gigantic propaganda campaign to spread the lie that price increases are caused by wage increases."

The delegates were from plants of the General Electric Co., Westinghouse, the electrical division of General Motors, RCA and other large electrical manufacturing concerns.

THREE hundred delegates from 20 states voted at a Textile Workers wage conference at Boston Nov. 8 to demand a general wage increase of 20c an hour from 158 woolen and worsted mills.

The woolen and the worsted workers are the third industrial division of the union to formulate wage demands. Northern cotton-rayon workers asked for a general 15c increase late last month and a few days later synthetic yard workers demanded 18c an hour across the board. Southern cotton-rayon workers will draw up their demands in Atlanta Dec. 8.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said that in the face of mounting prices textile workers "simply cannot maintain an American standard of living under present conditions."

Two hundred representatives of UPWA locals at a meeting in Chicago this week unanimously voted to prepare for strike action against the Big Four packers, Swift, Armour, Wilson and Cudahy, and most of the independent packers. UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein stated:

"The results of our negotiations at the moment leave no alternative but to implement our plans for strike action by establishing a strike strategy committee and by the preparing of the necessary strike apparatus by all local unions."

Chief demands are a dollar an hour minimum for men and women in all sections of the country, a guaranteed annual wage, a health and welfare fund.

GUILD STRIKES 3 MORE PAPERS

Spearheading the Newspaper Guild's wage programs, non-mechanical workers on Hearst's Los Angeles Herald Express and J. David Stern's three papers, the Philadelphia Record and the Camden Post and Courier, are on the strike, the former since Sept. 4 and the latter since Nov. 7.

The walkout in Philadelphia and Camden 600 employes followed nine weeks of fruitless negotiations. Management's only offer was based on a 12% average pay increase identical with one previously offered by the Philadelphia Inquiror and rejected by the Guild unit there.

The Guild made 41 separate concessions on its own proposals but management refused to budge beyond its one offer. The units had originally set a strike deadline for Oct. 31 , but Michael Harris, president of the Philadelphia Industrial Union Council and regional director of the CIO Steelworkers, persuaded them to withhold the walkout for a week.

Harris then took the lead in negotiations in an attempt to avert the strike, but found management unwilling to consider any compromise. The units on Nov. 6 reaffirmed their strike votes and Harris began marshalling full CIO support. The papers have continued to publish, with the executives doing the work aided by a few non-Guildsmen.

Early settlement of the Los Angeles strike faded this week when the management failed to secure agreement from the AFL printing craft unions and the CIO news venders that they would accept the tentative proposals for ending the walkout.

PACIFIC SEA STRIKE STILL ON

Despite optimistic statements by Federal conciliators that the West Coast maritime walkout would soon be settled, it appeared this week that the strike, which the CIO Longshoremen have declared a lockout, would enter its eighth week.

One day Federal conciliators announced that agreement would be reached within 24 hours on all phases of the dispute between the employers and the Longshoremen, the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., and the AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots.

Federal conciliators said that the MEBA and the Pacific American Shipowners Assn. had agreed to continue the language of the present contract on grievance machinery and discharges, and to include in the contract a new provision pledging the employers to refrain from undermining the union, discouraging union membership and interfering in the union's internal affairs.

The conciliators said that efforts would be made to reach complete agreement between the Waterfront Employers Assn. and the Longshoremen. Pres. Harry Bridges of the Longshoremen and CMU co-chairman declared that the employers were continuing the lockout, which statement was justified the next day when the Federal conciliators announced that the tieup had not been settled.

This member of the CIO Transport Workers is literally covered with buttons of his union as he takes part in a demonstration against the N. Y. City Board of Transportation which this week changed its mind and decided to give retroactive pay increases to workers on the municipal transportation system.

REID ROBINSON RE-ELECTED

Reid Robinson has been re-elected president of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, it was announced at the union's headquarters in Chicago this week on the basis of unofficial returns of the membership referendum.

Robinson defeated James J. Leary, present secretary-treasurer. Maurice Travis, Robinson's running mate, was elected vice-president, defeating Ralph Rasmussen, incumbent. Both Robinson and Travis were elected by the greatest majorities ever cast for these posts with returns almost complete, it was announced.

THOMAS AIDS ALLIS CHALMERS STRIKE

The Auto Workers' policy committee last weekend voted full support for the strikers at the West Allis, Wis., plant of the Allis Chalmers Co. and at the J. I. Case Co., Racine, Wis., and for the Local 600 in its dispute with the Ford Co. over health conditions at the Rouge plant.

The committee assigned UAW Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas to work full time with UAW Local 248 and Regional Director Joseph Mattson until the Allis-Chalmers strike is settled, pointing out that the company refused to arbitrate before and after the strike was called, and that it has never offered more than a 13½c an hour increase, while its major competitors have long ago settled for an 18c an hour increase.

The Case Co., the committee said, "refused to agree to any contract terms which make it possible for any form of genuine collective bargaining relations" and enjoyed generous tax rebates while it spurned the efforts of the highest U. S. Government officials including the President to settle the strike.

WIN $6 MILLION MORE

A strike threat by the CIO Transport Workers this week won $6 million in retroactive pay increases for 33,000 employes of the N. Y. city muncipal subway, elevated, street car and bus lines.

Acting on the advice of their international and local officers, members of Local 100 voted not to strike but to continue to press for an election to determine the collective bargaining agent for the municipal transportation workers. TWU Pres. Michael Quill declared that his union would poll 25,000 votes.

The N. Y., City Board of Transportation last week voted to pay a 20-cent an hour increase to the workers, but failed to pay the increase retroactive until last July 1 and to authorize an election all of which proposals had been made by Mayor O'Dwyer's advisory transit committee.

Then came the announcement of the meeting to vote in strike action. The board this week approved retroactive pay, but still held out against the election.

THE NEWCOMER: It's never easy for a "new kid." It's doubly hard on a boy or girl who is a newcomer in a strange land. A few understanding words from us can show our American-born children that to welcome these strangers as friends and playmates is one of the ABC's of patriotism. Explain, in terms of family and neighbors, that the builders of America were newcomers.

NEGRO WOMEN CONVENE

A delegation of some 500 leaders from 40 states, representing the masses of Negro women in America attended the 11th annual convention of the Natl. Council of Negro Women held Nov. 13-14 in Washington. Theme of the convention was "American Women Look to Their Government."

Mary McLeod Bethune, founder and president of the Council, said that technicians of government, "from the highest to the more humble" would be called upon to acquaint the women with government services. "We must know where to turn for assistance in the great problems that confront us all," she said.

Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach in an address on Thursday assured the Negro Council that "the struggle for human rights will be reinforced by legislation designed to foster and enhance these rights.

"Now more than ever," he said, "the peoples of the world look to this Nation as the symbol of democracy."

The Council delegates were received at the White House on Wednesday by Mrs. Harry Truman, and Thursday night held a meeting open to the public at the Dept. of Labor Auditorium. Dr. Channing Tobias, spoke on "Our World" and Estelle Massey Riddle talked on "The Role of the Women of the Darker Races in the World Today."

ACTIVITIES OF CIO AUXILIARIES

Efforts of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries have been concentrated in the field of consumer problems and political action during the past two years, states President Murray's report to the CIO convention now meeting in Atlantic City.

Working through the CIO Political Action Committee, Auxiliary members throughout the country gave freely of their time in checking registration lists, making house-to-house visits and doing other routine work essential to a political campaign.

Auxiliary officers serve on most of the important national committees, such as the President's Natl. Emergency Famine Committee, the Natl. Commission on Children; Advisory Committee of the Women's Bureau; Natl. Consumers Advisory Committee of OPA and others.

Members have helped on the legislative front by testifying before House and Senate Committees on such subjects as school lunches, child care centers and emergency maternal and infant care; and on the organization front by collecting food supplies and running soup kitchens during strikes.

Through their community contacts they have sought assistance and support for CIO policies from a wide variety of organizations.

"Our unions should encourage the building of Auxiliaries as part of our public relations work," states the report, for they "can be made a great force in the union's machinery for political action."

Sprucing Up

SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY

By HANNA SHERMAN

Billy Rose, in a recent column wrote that Katherine Cornell was tremendously flattered and pleased when he compared her walk to that of a famous Follies girl.

It's true. Great actresses usually are less concerned with the beauty of their faces than they are with their physical proportions and the way they use their bodies on the stage. Katherine Cornell's majesty and Elizabeth Bergman's charm are enhanced by the grace of their physical movements, walk and posture.

For the readers of this column, I interviewed Ruth Bluestone who teaches women how they can achieve the gracefulness and poise of the ladies of the theater. This clever young woman numbers many famous acting companies and stage personalities among her pupils.

She says, "The way you use your body—sit, stand, and walk—reflects your physical and emotional health. Good posture goes hand in hand with good health, makes you look more alert and attractive. Exercising properly should make you feel refreshed and relaxed, not tired.

"Exercise should become as much a part of your daily hygiene as brushing your teeth or combing your hair. Remember take them slowly. Practice them regularly."

I would add to this that good posture and a well-proportioned healthy body will do more for your appearance than expensive clothes and jewels. For even the loveliest clothes lose their attractiveness if the wearer betrays by her walk that she is really not proud of herself.

Miss Bluestone's exercises are designed to help you attain good posture, correct figure imperfections and help you relax. Here's an excellent posture exercise. Even a novice can do it and effect amazing results in her appearance.

Stand on the balls of your feet and with your back against a straight wall. Then slowly slide down the wall keeping your whole back touching all the while and sit down on your heels.

Now push through your buttocks and come up to the starting position. Do this several times. Then when you have the feel of it, turn sideways to the wall and do the same exercise, supporting your self by touching the wall with your hand. Be sure to keep your back straight throughout this exercise.

ANOTHER fine posture improver is this one. It's done on the floor, lying on your back. You should be relaxed while exercising. Concentrate on getting the feel of the movement rather than on speed.

Now lay your head down on the floor again and reach for the ceiling with your left leg. Don't bend the knee. Finally, lower your left leg slowly to the floor. Keep that tummy region pressed into your back and your whole back pressed into the floor.

Go through the same exercises with your right leg. Do these each three or four times and then repeat with both legs.

In other columns I will give you some of the other marvelous exercises Miss Bluestone teaches.

HAIL CONTRACT WITH 80 FIRMS

Hailing their new contract as the "one we fought for" 500 dry goods workers, members of the CIO Wholesale & Warehouse Workers Union, Local 65, returned to work this week following a six-week strike against 80 member firms of the Downtown Dry Goods Jobbers Assn., N. Y. City.

The strikers voted unanimously at a meeting this week to ratify terms of the new contract which include a general wage increase of $15 weekly, full back pay at the new rates for all time lost while on strike, a minimum wage of $46 for a 40-hour week for general help, a minimum of $75 guaranteed drawing against commission for outside salesmen, and a group insurance plan financed by employer contributions.

13 WINS IN DIXIE

Thirteen CIO victories in NLRB elections were reported to the CIO Organizing Committee during the week ending Nov. 11. "These brought to 248 the total number of victories won by the CIO since our Southern membership campaign began last May," Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee said.

SUGAR STRIKE TO END

The CIO Longshoremen and the negotiators for the Hawaiian sugar industry announced in a joint statement as The CIO NEWS was going to press that the strike of 25,000 workers at Hawaiian sugar plantations which was going well into its third month would soon be settled.

the ADVENTURES of JIM BARRY

The story, characters, incidents and names mentioned here are entirely imaginary and fictitious, and have no identification with actual persons, living or dead.

WHILE JIM AND WOODY ARE BEING INTERVIEWED FOR JOBS, CARRUTHERS — OWNER OF THE WARRENTOWN MILLS — AND HIS DAUGHTER RUBY OBSERVE...

IF HE'S FOR THE UNION — THEN THERE'S WAYS OF HANDLING HIS KIND!

I'LL KNOW SOON ENOUGH IF YOU CAN USE HIM AGAINST THE UNION.

I'M PUTTING YOU ON IN THE SHIPPING DEPARTMENT. HERE'S YORE CARD AND YO' CAN REPORT FOR WORK RIGHT NOW.

THANKS, MISTER!

WELL, WOODY, WE'RE INSIDE! THAT'S STEP ONE.

SHUCKS, JIM! WE'LL HAVE THIS PLACE ORGANIZED IN NO TIME!

NEW MEN, EH? GIVE THEM BOYS A HAND WITH THE CRATES OVER THERE...

SURE...

THEY WON'T HURT YOU, WOODY. IT'S ABOUT TIME YOU GOT A FEW CALLOUSES ON YOUR HANDS.

PRESENTLY...

WHEEEE ..THAT MUST BE THE LUNCH WHISTLE. I'M ALL IN.

WE'LL TAKE A REST — YOU'VE GOT ANOTHER HALF-DAY TO GO. I'LL GET AROUND A BIT AND LISTEN TO THE MEN...

HEY! HERE'S KIT! GUESS WE'LL HAVE LUNCH TOGETHER...

HELLO JIM... THOUGHT I'D COME OVER AND HAVE LUNCH WITH YOU!

I WAS DREAMING ABOUT THIS... COME ON! LET'S FIND A QUIET CORNER AND...

YOU MUST BE JIM BARRY — DAD POINTED YOU OUT TO ME! I'M RUBY CARRUTHERS...

YES... I'M JIM BARRY, BUT —

YOU MUSTN'T WASTE YOUR LUNCH HOUR... SO COME WITH ME.

BUT, BUT, MISS CARRUTHERS, I HAVE MY LUNCH WITH ME.

Not too much of a tip, dear... Remember your theories on inflation...

STORM OF PRICE BOOSTS; RENT CONTROL THREATENED

A storm of price increases that will strike hard at practically every American family followed the abandonment late last week of price, wage and salary controls, except the ceilings on rent, sugar and rice. Rent control is threatened.

Price rises ranged from soap which jumped from 50 to 75% at the wholesale level to all General Motors cars which will cost the public $100 more each.

In announcing the decontrol President Truman said it was forced on him because of an "unworkable" price control law, which was passed by a coalition led by Republicans and polltax Democrats.

He sharply criticized producers who are withholding goods from markets in the hope of obtaining higher prices and profits.

"The major problem with which we have had to contend is the withholding of goods from the market," Truman said. "As price controls are dropped one by one, many sellers naturally hold on to their goods in the hope that their turn will come next and that they can obtain higher prices.

"In addition to those who are holding on to goods merely in expectation of decontrol, there are others whose motive is deliberately to force decontrol by depriving consumers of essential goods or manufacturers of essential materials. This withholding is becoming so serious as to threaten key segments of the economy with paralysis."

MEANWHILE, on Capitol, Hill, Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.) who led the drive to wreck the price control law by weakening amendments, called for removal of rent ceilings."

"I believe," he said, "that one of the best ways to ease the housing shortage is to remove rent ceilings.

Removal of rent ceilings was opposed by Truman, although he said that "some adjustment" may be necessary.

"Housing," the President said, "is desperately short and will continue to be short for a long time to come. Tenants are in no position to resist extortionate demands.

"The fixing of rents by the ordinary processes of bargaining would bring hardship and suffering to our people."

THAT abandonment of price controls will cause much hardship was seen in the flood of price boosts that followed the lifting of ceiling restrictions.

Cost of materials for badly needed homes will shoot upward with copper, lead, zinc and steel scrap increases. Copper jumped from 13⅛c a pound to 17½c and steel scrap rose by $2.50 a ton. The Geneva Steel Co., a U. S. Steel subsidiary, announced that structural steel prices have advanced slightly over $2.52 per 100 pounds in carload lots.

The Intl. Harvester Co. ordered a 9% boost in farm implement prices. General Electric home appliances jumped from 10 to 60%. Westinghouse Electric advanced prices of switches, transformers and small motors 8 to 25%.

REALTORS DRIVE FOR RENT HIKE

Attacks on a broader front against housing for the veterans and the people were launched this week by the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards and the ultra-conservative Republican wing.

The realtors meeting at Atlantic City, heard Pres. Robert R. Wason of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers call not only for a rent rise of 15% but also for an end of priorities for home building because of a "16-year backlog of unbuilt industrial enterprises."

Rep. John Taber (R. N. Y.) proposective chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, referred to the public housing program as a "racket" and announced his intention of attempting wholesale slashes in the number of employes working under Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt.

Inside Story Of:

NAZI CARTEL'S POWER DRIVE AIDED BY U. S. BUSINESS

THE full story of how a gigantic combination of German chemical companies, G Farbenindustrie, built up its own power and Nazi influence before the war by working out restrictive trade agreements with leading producers in America, England and other countries is told in a new survey soon to be issued by the Twentieth Century Fund.

At the outbreak of war, our capacity to supply our armed services with needed munitions, synthetic rubber and other supplies was hampered by restrictions that had been imposed on American firms by IG Farbenindustrie agreements, says this forthcoming report on Cartels in Action.

The report traces the history and aggressive moves from the time the "Big Six" chemical firms of Germany came together in 1925 to form the Interessengemeinschaft, Farbenindustrie A. G.

"After the Nazis came to power," says the report, "IG's relationship to the German Government became more intimate . . . It became increasingly difficult throughout the thirties to distinguish between IG's purely business objectives and the political aims for which it served as a Nazi instrument."

One of the devices used by the cartel was to set up a subsidiary company in America which would be jointly owned by IG and the American firm. One such subsidiary was Jasco, established by IG and Standard Oil of New Jersey.

Describing the workings of this agreement, as brought out in testimony before the Senate Subcommittee on Military Affairs in 1945, the report says that "IG withheld essential 'know-how' from Jasco and refused to let it develop Buna rubber in the U. S."

Nitrogen compounds are essential in the manufacture of explosives. And "another Jasco venture definitely contemplated by Standard and IG was the manufacture of synthetic ammonia (nitrogen) . . . IG vetoed this project."

REVIEWING the origins of the IG combine, the Twentieth Century Fund's report describes the activities of some of the founding German companies at the time of World War I.

Despite the confiscation of German patents and property in America and other allied countries, the report says, "When World War I ended, IG still held a commanding position in two major chemical fields: high pressure synthesis (the most important product of which was synthetic ammonia) and coal-tar derivatives."

In the world picture, the chief potential rivals of IG were the du Pont Co. in the U. S. and the Imperial Chemical Industries in Great Britain.

The report traces in detail the long history of negotiations among these three units, as well as other large producers in the field, and analyzes the nature of their operations.

THE report points out that IG Farbenindustrie acquired control of a number of large American concerns by various commercial devices and eventually came into complete ownership of them.

Aside from direct buying up of American companies, the report says, "the second method used by IG in returning to the American market was to renew and extend its cartel agreements with financially independent American chemical manufacturers. Whether by design or otherwise, this was a piecemeal process.

"IG's American cartel affilitations are legion. Few American chemical companies do not have some form of agreement or understanding with IG for reconciling conflicting interests and for cooperating in chosen spheres of the world chemicals markets."

GM VETS DENIED JOBLESS PAY

The CIO Auto Workers this weekend threatened to appeal to the courts a decision of the Veterans Administration against paying veterans' compensation claims to ex-GIs idle during the General Motors strike last winter. winter.

The ruling means that an estimated 50,000 veterans will not receive $260 each. The VA overruled a decision favorable to the veterans issued by its own Michigan agent, which General Motors appealed to VA headquarters.

Want The Score On Nov. 5?

"The Meaning of The Elections," a stimulating discussion by three of the country's outstanding liberal leaders, is now available in pamphlet form.

The discussion was carried on by Henry Wallace, Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.) and Jack Kroll, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee, on the America United half-hour program over NBC Nov. 10.

All three agreed that the progressive forces suffered a setback in the November elections. All agreed that workers, liberals and independent voters must work unitedly to prevent another defeat in 1948. And all agreed that the Democratic party had contributed to its own loss of Congress by weak leadership and failure to carry out the militant program of Franklin Roosevelt.

Copies of "The Meaning of The Elections" may be obtained from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl. N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Price 5c a copy.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt (with Fala) last week bought a 40,000-calorie CARE food package in N. Y. City for delivery to some hungry family in Europe. The sale was made by Dr. Lincoln Clark, assistant executive director of CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe) with Judge Dorothy Kenyon as witness. HUGE PROFITS, LOW WAGES MENACE TO DEMOCRACY

For a Better Life for American Workers. CIO, in Convention at Atlantic City, this week heard Pres. Philip Murray warn that "no man operating great enterprise can in this day and age stand before the bar of public opinion and say that his interests in American life are confined to his stockholders and his coupon clippers." Murray, in a plea for peaceful negotiation of wage increases, declared that exhorbitant profits combined with low-pay consumer purchasing power would result in another depression. (Story -- page 3).

BUILD 2,000,000 HOUSING UNITS A YEAR, CIO ASKS

BLISTERING attacks by Vice Pres. R. J. Thomas of the Auto Workers and Lewis A. Berne of the Office & Professional Workers on the foes of homes for veterans and workers preceded the adoption by the CIO Convention of a resolution calling on the President and Congress for "a reinforced and strengthened over-all housing program, based on the recognition of the magnitude of the needs of the homeless veterans and our slum families."

To carry out this program, the resolution demanded erection of 2,000,000 housing units a year, enactment of the General Housing (Wagner-Ellender-Taft) Bill, S. 1592; temporary requisition of unused housing and of hotel and resort facilities, and the end of discrimination against families with children.

It was also proposed that the Patman Housing Act be amended to aid the leasing of war assets plants for the production of a million assembly line homes a year, and to permit the Federal Government to purchase industrialized housing and to distribute those homes through local housing authorities for rental to homeless veterans and others.

The resolution also called for limiting profiteering in housing, increasing premium payments to building material producers from $400 million to $600 million, eliminating non-essential construction, and encouraging formation of cooperative housing groups.

THOMAS, who is chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, declared that one of the reasons for the housing shortage is "the fact that houses are still being built by methods that were used 100 years ago. In recent years there have been developments in housing under which houses can be built in factories the same as automobiles and which, if put in use, could go far toward solving the housing shortage."

Housing Thomas said, is so important that a special session of Congress should be called to act on the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Bill, which was passed by the Senate at the last session but was bottled up in a House Committee.

Thomas scored "reactionary politicians in Congress, who know that the bill could be passed if it came before the House," as well as "real estate interests who feel that if there is a housing shortage real estate costs can be raised and higher profits can be made." The UAW vice-president continued:

"There are literally millions of veterans in America today living in tents and trailers, when actually there is no reason for such a condition."

He lashed at the proponents of the theory that construction of high-cost housing, through the elimination of controls, would provide vacated homes "into which workers can move."

"I am quite sure there is no member of the CIO who wants to see veterans living in slums, and if the problem of housing is solved in America for veterans there is no question but that the housing problem generally will be solved for the workers of America," Thomas said.

NLRB HIT AS BIASED AGAINST CIO UNIONS

THE CIO convention accused the Natl. Labor Relations Board of "demonstrating a bias against CIO unions" in favor of AFL craft unions "in case after case."

In a resolution, the delegates declared that by becoming a party to raids by the AFL craft unions on CIO industrial-type unions, the NLRB was disregarding its own doctrine "that it will not entertain bargaining election petitions by craft organizations where there has been a successful bargaining history on an industrial basis."

Lee Pressman, CIO General Counsel, warned the convention delegates that forces within the NLRB are prepared to appease enemies of the Wagner Act by throwing overboard many of the cardinal principles of labor's magna charta.

He revealed that at a conference staged by the NLRB for attorneys of the CIO, AFL, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, one NLRB member admitted that "the election returns of the last few days would seem to indicate that changes in policy are necessary."

This same NLRB member—Pressman did not name him—publicly stated that he favored an amendment to the Act which would make unions subject to penalties for "unfair labor practices." The same Board member also spoke in favor of an amendment which would clearly bar labor from the field of management jurisdiction—with what consitutes that activity not clearly defined.

"These two amendments would, of course, mean the end of the National Labor Relations Act," Pressman warned.

LABOR IN FIGHT FOR LIFE

THE CIO convention served solemn notice last week that the power of organized labor will be used to fight actively and continuously those "sinister forces" seeking to deprive American workers of their hard-won union rights.

In a series of resolutions the convention:

- Warned that it will not permit open shop interests to substitute the "law of the jungle" for democratic labor relations laws.
- Called for a continued battle against the use of injunctions in labor disputes, through the passage of state laws outlawing injunctions, and the defeat of judges who issue them to employers whose workers are on strike.
- Demanded the repeal of the Smith-Connally Act, passed as a wartime measure to restrict unions' economic and political rights.
- Urged labor to become constantly more active on legislative matters, both in the national Congress, and in the various state legislatures which often constitute the breeding ground for all sorts of anti-labor measures.

Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, warned the convention delegates that all sorts of repressive measures are being plotted in the inner councils of big business, and called for united action to halt the onslaught.

He accused Sen. Ball (R. Minn.) of spearheading the attack on American unions in the federal Congress. Taking up the Ball proposals, which have been widely publicized since the elections, Pressman charged:

"If you analyze all these proposals, what they come down to is simply this: how can they so undermine labor through legislation that we will not have the strength to meet the corporations when they engage in collective bargaining? How can they so undermine and destroy labor unions that management can say 'no' and be safe when they say 'no'?"

The CIO Legal Department head predicted that the weapons of the past—the thug and the strikebreaker—will give away to fancier, smarter, anti-union devices.

Big business, Pressman asserted, is getting laws on the state and federal statute books to permit management to argue that struggles between unions and employers are struggles between unions and government.

PRES. MURRAY RE-ELECTED

In an 18-minute ovation following his nomination, delegates to the CIO Convention unanimously re-elected Philip Murray as president.

In a resolution earlier in the Convention, delegates expressed their "deepest appreciation . . . for his wise guidance in unifying our organization so that it may meet the future strong and undivided."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey also was re-elected. He was vigorosuly applauded.

Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW will continue to serve as a CIO vice-president.

Delegate George Baldanzi, vice-president of the Textile Workers, strongly objected to the election of two CIO vice-presidents from the same union. The convention, however, overruled him.

Other vice-presidents, who were re-elected included: L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Albert J. Fitzgerald, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, Emil Rieve and Frank Rosenblum.

Additional changes in the CIO Executive Board, which came too late for this week's CIO NEWS, will be reported next week.

HIT MINE INJUNCTION

SHARP criticism of the federal government's resort to the use of anti-labor injunctions in the current dispute of the United Mine Workers was voiced unanimously by the CIO convention.

In a special amendment added to the statement on anti-labor injunctions approved by the resolutions committee, the convention declared:

"We condemn the action taken by the Federal Government in obtaining a sweeping injunction against the United Mine Workers of America. This is a clear violation of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. No anti-labor injunction can dispose of the problems now confronting workers who see their earnings shrink before the fast rising cost of living. American democracy cannot tolerate any attempt to impose economic slavery through vicious anti-labor injunctions."

The statement was adopted by the CIO convention delegates just a few hours after the government had acted in its effort to prevent the walkout of AFL coal miners.

In adopting the resolution, the convention made clear that it was taking no particular position on the miners' strike itself.

HUGE PROFITS A MENACE

Wages Must Rise, Murray Warns

Text of Pres. Murray's Keynote Speech—Pages 12 and 13

Making a vigorous point before a Convention session was Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers to Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Philip Murray.

THE fabulous profits of American industry — highest on record—are the gravest threat to our democratic way of life that exists today.

The sharp contrast of a $16 billion profit expectation for industry in 1947 and the cut in real wages suffered by the American people constitutes a grave threat to full employment and full production, Murray warned the 600 delegates.

CIO, he said, had based its bargaining for last winter's wage increases on a government report which said that wages could be raised without boosting prices, and on the understanding that effective price control would be maintained.

Now, with price control wiped out and with workers' living standards sharply reduced, CIO will lead a wage movement for the people's welfare. Murray, with many other delegates, spoke on a Convention wage resolution (see Page 14) which said:

"Millions of American workers today find themselves totally unable to meet a budget providing for the minimum necessities of living. This situation can only result in an early and inevitable economic depression as in 1929, with accompanying human misery and chaos.

"Under present conditions it is therefore imperative that American industry in collective bargaining give substantial wage increases. Our people must have sustained purchasing power and a decent living wage to avert the swift economic tragedy which now confronts us."

MURRAY cited figures presented in the CIO Economic Outlook, estimating on the basis of government reports, that after-taxes profits of all U. S. corporations will jump from an estimated $11.8 billion in 1946 to a record-breaking $16.1 billion in 1947. These figures compare with the 1936-39 average of $3.9 billion and a wartime, 1942-45, average of $9.5 billion.

Manufacturing corporations, the Outlook said, will have a $7.7 billion fund available for wage increases.

The publication quoted figures of the Heller Committee of the University of California and its own computations to show that the average family of four in the U. S. now requires a weekly income of $68.19 to provide a minimum "health and decency" standard of living.

This compares with the average weekly earnings of $45.10 for workers in all manufacturing industries as of last September. This is $2 less than peak wartime earnings and in terms of real purchasing power is at least $8 less than the 1945 peak, due to rising prices.

"What," asked Murray, "could be more dangerous to our national economy, what might constitute a greater threat to full employment and full production than this distorted, wholly inequitable distribution of our national wealth?

"It is asserted," he continued, "that certain interests here in the United States threaten our institutions and threaten our form of government—and I speak now with particular reference to allegations made concerning the Communist Party.

"But what could constitute a graver threat to the perpetuity of our free existence in the United States of America, our democratic way of life, than this fiscal picture. It is a far greater threat than anything which ever presented itself to the people of the United States.

"The boom is on in the fourth quarter of 1946, and if there is a continuation of these staggering profits at the expense of the American people and the American wage-earner, the bust is bound to follow. No one can stop it except the exploiters, the exploiters of our system, and the exploiters of the people."

In another resolution urging the raising of the federal minimum wage from 40c to 65c and eventually 75c, the Convention declared that the old law "fails not merely in protection of the human needs of the workers; it fails to protect the economic needs of the nation."

MURRAY HITS NEWSPAPERS AS IRRESPONSIBLE TO PUBLIC

THE public irresponsibility of large employers, and of the daily press that wealthy publishers control, was sharply taken to task by Pres. Philip Murray at the CIO Convention.

Murray said, "No man having in his possession great wealth, operating great enterprise, can in this day and age stand before the bar of public opinion and say that his interests in American life are confined to his stockholders and to his coupon clippers."

Pointing to huge profits of industry since the war and even greater expectations for 1947 (see main story, this page), Murray said that CIO believes that American business is now extracting enough profit to make substantial wage concessions without increasing prices.

"There are a lot of notions abroad in the land," he added, "which undoubtedly create the impression that the CIO is bent upon engaging itself in widespread strikes. The CIO never entered a conference in its entire history with the idea of striking."

Noting an editorial in a Philadelphia paper which said that the CIO is "on an inflationary rampage," Murray said that perhaps the writer had not talked to the housewives in his city about the rising cost of living.

It should be borne in mind, he pointed out, that big newspapers do not reflect the point of view of the public.

"They merely reflect the opinion of people that own considerable property and have a great deal of wealth, and that may not have too much interest in either the well-being of the individual or the well being of the country."

Murray said he would like the newspapers to indulge in a little constructive criticism in other directions than at labor.

"It would be interesting were they to print the profit picture in the United States of America, the growth of monopoly during the war and following the end of the war," he declared.

THE CIO President cited an example of the tender handling of big industrialists by the employer press.

Murray said that Alfred P. Sloan, chairman of the Board of General Motors, had offered a peculiar panacea for our economic ills that, for some reason, drew little criticism.

Murray quoted Sloan as saying that, "Collective bargaining must be permitted to follow the full course without interference from any outside influence, and irrespective of the economic consequences on the contending parties."

"Now," the CIO head declared, "did Philip Murray make a statement of that description it would appear in almost every newspaper throughout the nation. He would be publicly villified and castigated and condemned.

"Did Mr. Murray say, 'I am going to throw this nation into a strike come what may, irrespective of its economic consequences,' what would the nation say?

"Mr. Sloan does not stop there. He says that 'when the public interests are substantially involved they must be protected by law, limiting the scope of strikes, or of decentralizing the economic power of labor to a point where the public interests are not substantially affected.'

"Well, ordinarily that would look to be a very good statement, but when Mr. Sloan is talking about decentralization and economic power why doesn't he talk about General Motors? There lies the most highly centralized and most powerful business institution in America.

"Do you know what Mr. Sloan would have to say about it if we went into the Federal Congress and asked for a decentralization of the General Motors monopoly? He would howl to the high heavens that a socialistic revolution was under way, and that the beloved system of free enterprise was about to be destroyed by these heinous men and by this subversive institution known as the CIO.

"Why don't the newsprints of the nation do a little editorializing on those subjects? Why doesn't Senator Ball talk about things of this sort when he is attempting to destroy industry-wide bargaining in the United States? Why doesn't he at the same time suggest a complete overhaul of monopoly control in the United States of America?"

FOR ROUNDED SECURITY

A broad program aimed at ending workers' insecurity, and including demands for payment of annual wages, will be developed as part of CIO's collective bargaining, a CIO Convention resolution stated.

The program for "rounded protection" will include bargaining for adequate pension and health insurance plans, and group hospitalization programs.

"The struggle for a guaranteed annual wage, at a level sufficient to insure an adequate income is part of the struggle for the preservation of our human resources," the resolution noted.

"But it is more than that. A guaranteed minimum annual wage is a . . . means of . . . establishing an expanded purchasing power as a foundation for a stable economy."

CIO REAFFIRMS AMERICANISM

"THE Congress of Industrial Organizations is an American institution dedicated to the attainment of its well defined social and economic objectives within the framework of American political democracy."

This was the opening paragraph of a resolution unanimously adopted by the CIO Convention.

Quoting CIO Pres. Murray, the resolution said: "We must pledge only one national allegiance, and that allegiance is to our own country, the United States of America. There can be no difference in point of view regarding those phases of the situation. There should not be. There must not be."

The last paragraph of the resolution said that the delegates "resent and rejct efforts of the Communist Party or other political parties and their adherents to interfere in the affairs of the CIO. This convention serves notice that we will not tolerate such intereference."

IN a speech before reading the resolution to the delegates, Pres. Murray noted that the employer press has been "deluged" with assertions that the CIO is "communistically dominated." (Full text in adjoining columns).

"I have consistently," Murray related, "taken occasion to deny such charges, contending that these statements were not true.

"However, the propaganda disseminated throughout the nation, particularly in the newspapers, created in certain sections of our country a kind of hysteria over the subject, and in the course of the last Congressional election many aspirants for public office, taking advantage of these misrepresentations, denounced and slandered this movement of ours to win votes at the polls.

"I have taken occasion repeatedly to assert that this union was not and must never be communistically controlled or inspired," Murray declared. "It does not care to bother with, and it will not tolerate interference from not only the Communistic Party, remember, but other political parties.

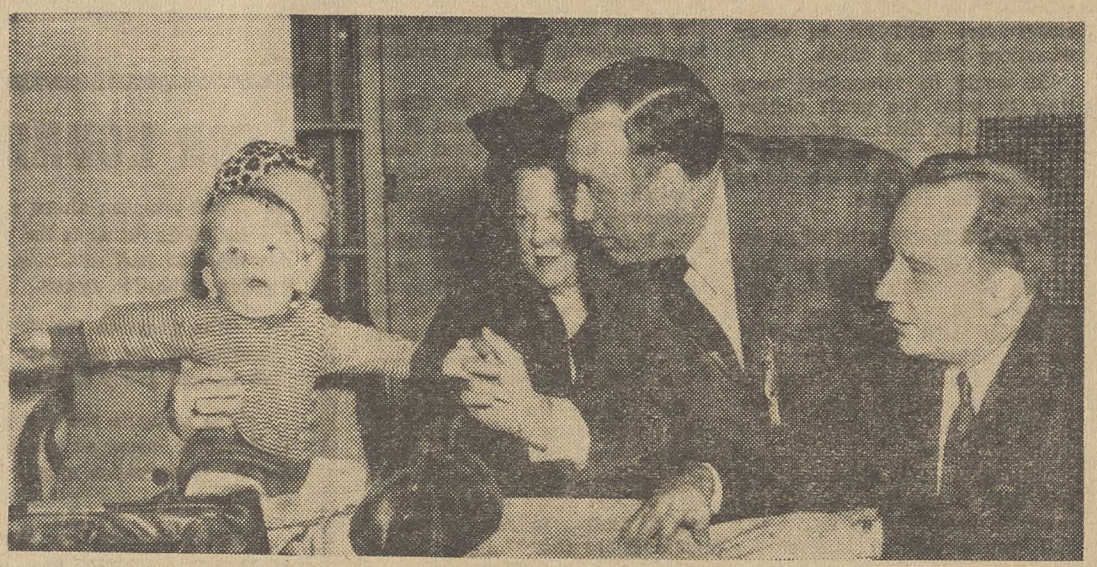
"Before I read the statement," Murray continued, "I should like it to be understood that there is no prescribed legislation contained in the document.

"The matter of legislating concerning subjects of this description is one which becomes the exclusive property of each of the international unions affiliated with the national CIO movement.

"The statement of policy determines and sets up certain guideposts that necessarily must be followed by each of our international affiliates, including our state and city industrial union councils.

"It is a statement of policy designed to chart a course for the overall conduct of our international unions and all of our subsidiary affiliates."

"It should not be misconstrued to be a repressive measure, calculated to do certain things of a repressive nature. . . . As the president of this organization I should like to be distinctly understood that I am definitely opposed to any form of repression in this movement of ours. There should be no misunderstanding about that."



Mrs. Mercedes Shane, niece of Pres. Murray, believes its never to early to start youngsters on the right track. She brought her son, Michael to the Convention. The admiring audience, l. to r., includes Mrs. Philip Murray, Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW, and Delmond Garst, assistant to Organizing Director Haywood.

MURRAY'S SPEECH ON INTERFERENCE

Full text of President Murray's speech on Declaration of Policy resolution passed by CIO Convention Nov. 18.

IT MIGHT be opportune at this moment for the presiding officer to give to the delegates the benefit of such information as he may have in his possession regarding the need for the introduction of this resolution today.

For some weeks prior to the convening of this convention, and particularly in the course of the past few days, the news organs of the nation, in so far as their columns are concerned, were literally deluged with a great amount of material concerning the position the CIO convention might take with regard to an extremely important issue, that issue being one with which the delegates are fully conversant.

I have consistently, in the course of my incumbency as President of your Union taken occasion to deny such charges, contending that these statements were not true.

However, the propaganda disseminated throughout the nation, particularly in the newspapers, created in certain sections of our country a kind of hysteria over the subject, and in the course of the last Congressional election many aspirants for public office, taking advantage of these misrepresentations, denounced this movement of ours and slandered this movement of ours to win votes at the polls.

As I have stated before, I have taken occasion repeatedly to assert that this Union, the Congress of Industrial Organizations was not and must never be Communistically controlled or inspired. However, that statement again was one of fact, an incontrovertible fact.

HENCE, due to these wild and wholly irrational statements I thought it proper in the course of this convention to have the matter brought to the attention of the CIO Executive Board.

Last Friday, without consulting anyone, any officer of this organization or any member of this Union, I assumed the personal responsibility for directing the attention of the Executive Board to this all-important matter.

I should emphasize very clearly again at this juncture that I requested the Board to give consideration to the subject matter, that I was provided no inspiration by any officer or member of this Union.

That statement which I now make is for the purpose of at least telling the truth, because certain news organs this morninfi published stories having to do with the introduction of the subject matter to the Executive Board which were positively untrue.

The President of this organization, without advice, counsel, or assistance, introduced the subject matter to the Executive Board. That was done last Friday. I expressed to the members of the Executive Board certain personal convictions I had concerning the matter. There was no disagreement in the Board about my expressed convictions.

I thereupon appointed six members of the Executive Board to make a special study of the subject matter and to later report their recommendations to the Executive Board.

At this point I might also add that I had no advice from a single, solitary individual as to who should serve on this committee. The committee was selected by the President of the organization without any advice or without consultation with any member of the Board, any member of your Union, or any representative of our organization.

The committee, therefore, was appointed last Friday afternoon. It met Friday evening for a few hours. It continued its discussions throughout Saturday until about fifteen minutes after 6:00 Saturday afternoon. It recessed and met Sunday morning at 9:30 A. M., and it concluded its work about 2:00 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

THE committee submitted a unanimous report to the Executive Board yesterday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. This report was recommended to the Board by the President of this organization, as well as the committee, and was unanimously adopted without a single solitary dissenting vote or voice.

So that the statement of policy adopted by the Board, which I am about to read to this convention, it should be understood, met with the unanimous approval of the members of the CIO Executive Board.

Before I read the statement I should like it to be understood that there is no prescribed legislation contained in the document. The matter of legislating concerning subjects of this description is one which becomes the exclusive property of each of the International Unions affiliated with the National CIO movement.

The statement of policy determines and sets up certain guideposts that necessarily must be followed by each of our International affiliates, including our state and city industrial union councils. It is a statement of policy designed to chart a course for the overall conduct of our International Unions and all of our subsidiary affiliates.

It should not be misconstrued to be a repressive measure, calculated to do certain things of a repressive nature, but it does provide definitely certain charts and certain courses, that when this subject matter is disposed of, should be and in fact must be adhered to within the councils of the National CIO and all of its affiliates.

I HAVE had a number of people since I arrived in Atlantic City come around to see me. I have had a great many communications which, in substance, suggested that this organization of ours should indulge itself in the extravagances of repressive legislation.

As the President of this organization I should like it to be distinctly understood that I am definitely opposed to any form of repression in this movement of ours. There should be no misunderstanding about that.

On the other hand, there should be a very distinct understanding that, through the voluntary democratic processes created within the framework of our national unions and our CIO, there should be strict adherence to the policy statement set forth by the Executive Board in this document which I am about to present to the convention this afternoon.

The statement, when presented, will undoubtedly constitute an answer to all of the villainous, slanderous abuses to which this organization has been subjected in recent months. It portrays rather vividly this Union's allegiance to one country, and that is the United States of America.

About that there has never been any misunderstanding or division. It portrays in graphic form another outstanding fact, and that is that this movement of ours is a trade union movement interested in the logical aspirations of all true trade unionists in the United States of America.

It does not care to be bothered with, and it will not tolerate, interference from not only

POLITICAL ACTION HERE TO STAY

CIO POLITICAL action is here to stay. That fact was made clear at the CIO convention last week, both in the text of a strong resolution pledging continued support of PAC and a speech by PAC Director Jack Kroll outlining the work ahead during the next two years.

"The people did not vote to scrap the program of Franklin D. Roosevelt," the convention resolution said in effect, but the elections recorded the people's dissatisfaction with repeated failure on the part of the government to meet the people's basic needs.

That dissatisfaction was expressed most clearly in the decision of large numbers of voters to stay away from the polls. The Nov. 5 elections thus constituted no Republican landslide, the resolution said, for "only a small shift in the vote would have completely changed the results."

Nevertheless reaction will use its recent political gains to launch new attacks on the living standards, economic security and democratic rights of the people, and labor will have to be on constant guard if it is to protect its hard-won gains.

"We must bring the issues facing the people into every shop and every home," the resolution said.

PAC's job, in every local and city CIO council, will be one of exposing reaction's progress and of mobilizing the people for defense of their rights. In doing so the local PAC's will be paving the way for more successful election campaigns in 1947 and 1948.

The resolution recommended continuation of the Political Action Committee in its present form; called upon all international unions to give special attention to PAC work with their organizations; and called upon unions to mobilize all progressive forces in their communities to strengthen the democratic fight against reaction.

"Reaction has won a skirmish in the continuing battle for social progress," the resolution declared.

"But the forces of the people remain strong and the final decision will be written by them. Organized and united, nothing can stop them in their forward march toward a secure and plentiful America."

IN HIS address to the convention, Kroll conceded that we "were defeated." But, he added quickly, "we were not licked."

Analyzing the Republican campaign, the PAC director charged that political reactionaries, afraid to go before the people on real issues, rested their strategy on "three C's."

"Behind the iron curtain of their unbridled demagogy, poured into the minds of voters day and night through their press, the reactionaries concealed their objectives as they concealed their records."

But such a policy of artificial confusion could not have won alone, Kroll charged.

"There was another and more important factor in their favor. There is no denying the fact that our people were disturbed by the rising cost of living, by the shortages of meat and homes, by the rumors of war, and the persistent whisperings about the coming depression. . . . The net effect was precisely what the reactionaries prayed for, a small vote: disgruntled voters by the millions stayed away from the polls."

This victory through default of many voters, Kroll said, is a challenge to PAC in the next two years.

Reaction, he charged, sidestepped issues and hid its real objectives during the past campaign.

"It is our task to drive them into the open on issues and then meet and defeat them on those issues," he told the delegates.

MEMORIAL FOR HILLMAN

A million dollar "Sidney Hillman Memorial Foundation" established by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in honor of the union's late president was announced at the CIO convention.

The fund will be used for awards, grants, prizes and other payments to aid and improve labor-management relations as "a living memorial to a great labor leader," said ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky.

Bulk of the funds will be raised by subscription both from workers and employers in the clothing and allied industries, and from any others interested. A board of trustees will be created made up of representatives of the union, clothing industry, and the field of education, arts, sciences and professions.

ASK PROBE OF BILBO

Senator Bilbo of Mississippi, avowed member of the Ku Klux Klan and vicious enemy of labor, was given a severe verbal lashing in a resolution passed unanimously by the loud and indignant shouts of delegates to the CIO convention.

The convention urged the Senate Committee investigation campaign expenditures to "carry out an efficient, vigorous and honest investigation of the Bilbo campaign, make public its charges and recommend to the Senate that Bilbo not be seated."

Charges against Bilbo include the accusation that he accepted bribes from war contractors estimated at $100,000.

Pointing out that his re-election by a narrow margin at the primary election was achieved by inciting white citizens in Mississippi to the use of force and violence against qualified Negro voters, the CIO declared that his election was illegal.

COPS CLUB PICKETS; LABOR HOLIDAY CALLED

A general labor holiday for "an indefinite period" has been declared by the South Jersey IUC as the result of continued police interference with peaceful picket lines before the plant of the Camden Courier and Post where the CIO Newspaper Guild has been on strike three weeks.

The Guild is also striking the Philadelphia Record, which with the two Camden papers is owned by "liberals" publisher J. David Stern.

Even before the mass arrests by Camden police precipitated the labor holiday, the CIO convention in a resolution called on Stern to practice what he preaches to other employers, and placed the three papers on the unfair list.

Since the strike began the Camden police have been massing police at the Courier-Post plant. The Shipbuilding Workers this week began to assist in the picketing of the plant, where the papers have been published by executives and non-Guild members.

Swinging nightsticks, the police swooped down on the peaceful picket lines and arrested 34 pickets, as many as they could crowd into the patrol wagon.

The next day, Nov. 20, 1,500 shipbuilding workers appeared on the picketline, locked arms and marched around the building. The police did nothing but watch the demonstration. The 34 who had been arrested received suspended sentences.

This weekend the police again charged the picket lines, swollen not only by the Shipbuilding Workers, but also by members of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Food & Tobacco Workers. This time they arrested 32 pickets, injured several others, and exhausted the patience of the South Jersey IUC.

The Guild struck only after it had made 41 concessions and after Stern refused to budge from his offer of tn inadequate 12% wage increase.

STRIKING PRINTERS WIN SUPPORT

Striking printers on the Trenton, N. J., Times got a double boost when the AFL and CIO central bodies in Mercer county both placed the struck newspaper on their official unfair lists.

Action came from the Central Labor Union and the Industrial Union Council labelling the scab-operated Republican paper an enemy to all organized labor in the Trenton area.

The 42 printers, members of Local 71, International Typographical Union (AFL), will round out a full year of strike next January. They started something novel in strike methods last summer when they began publishing their own daily paper, the Trentonian, after all efforts to negotiate with the Kerney clan, Times owners, had failed.

Honor FDR

Tribute was paid to a "truly great world citizen," Franklin D. Roosevelt, in a resolution passed by a unanimous rising vote at the CIO convention to honor late President. Delegates rose and stood silently for a minute following the reading of the resolution which stated in part:

"He stirred the hearts and minds and imagination of the American people as few before in our history and as none in our generation. He led the American people to new heights in social, economic and political progress and understanding. . . .

"As a world citizen and world leader his contributions and achievements became the contributions of our country to the welfare of mankind throughout the world."

MRS. BESSIE HILLMAN

CIO In Tribute To Hillman

Tribute to the memory of Sidney Hillman, longtime head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, a leader in CIO and governmental affairs, and a founder of the World Federation of Trade Unions, was paid by the CIO convention in an impressive hour's ceremony.

With the delegates sitting in absolute silence, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey read a resolution of mourning which had been passed by the CIO Executive Board last summer. The resolution was adopted by the convention, after which a handsome scroll of its text was presented to Mrs. Bessie Hillman, his widow.

Mrs. Hillman, long active in the Clothing Workers and now a vice-president of that union, spoke with obvious emotion after she had been presented with the scroll.

"To Mr. Murray I want to say that he could not pay greater tribute to my husband than to remain the leader, the president, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations," she said.

"To you men, you could not pay greater tribute to my husband than to stay on your jobs and continue where my husband left off. The work that he has done has been well known to you. For this he lived, and for this he died."

Both Murray and Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the ACWA spoke briefly during the proceedings.

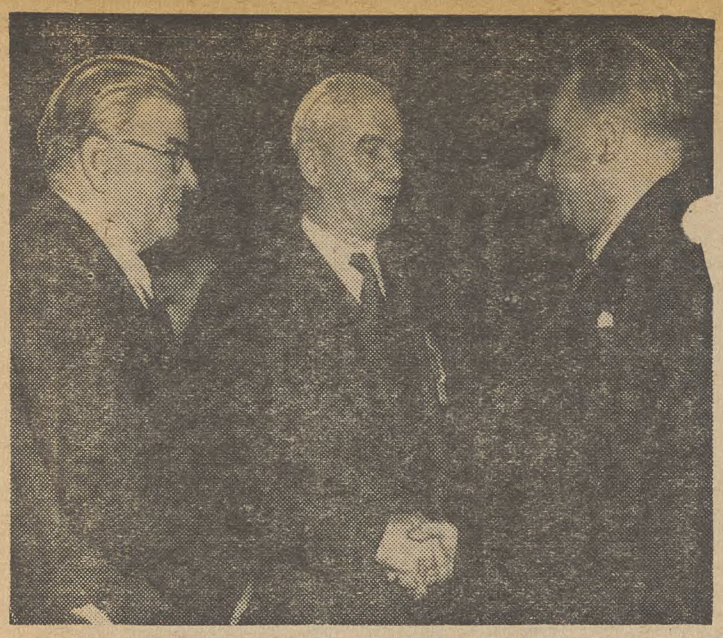
CIO DEMANDS BIG 3 UNITY FOR PEACE



Greetings from British Labor were brought to the CIO convention by two union officials. Both spoke briefly to the 600 delegates. Here they are with Pres. Murray: (left), Herbert Tracey, British Trades Union Congress writer and an official of the Natl. Union of Journalists; (right) Will Lawther, head of the British Federation of Miners. Both hailed growing international labor cooperation.

FRIENDSHIP and unity among the countries of the world—through Big Three cooperation and the development of the United Nations—rather than through atomic diplomacy, is the one hope for continued world peace, the CIO convention declared last week.

"If we fail to achieve unity, then the world faces war which means destruction of humanity itself," a convention resolution warned the American people.

Atomic energy—a development "to the credit of many for peace, progress and the benefit of mankind, the CIO statement warned. "If we are to have peace, the stockpiling of atomic bombs must cease."

At the same time the CIO commended the government for its stated conviction that "international control of atomic energy, with full power of inspection, and the outlawing of atomic weapons, is imperative and feasible."

The convention's foreign policy stand was based on three separate resolutions: one dealing with the whole scope of international relations; a second pledging full support to the World Federation of Trade Unions; and a third decrying the government's failure to give CIO equal representation with the AFL in the bodies of the Intl. Labor Organization.

CIO will accept no ILO appointment whatsoever until it receives such equality, the convention decided.

It expressed belief in the universal demand of the people of the world for peace, and urged instituted backing of the UN.

Enduring peace, the resolution said, requires assurance that militarism or Nazism will not resume its development in Japan or Germany. CIO called for "complete demilitarization" of those two countries, the "utter destruction of all vestiges of fascism in Germany and Japan"; and the wiping out of the big economic cartels which fed the war machines of Hitler and Hirohito.

Warning that fascism is a disease which knows no national borders and which threatens all democratic nations, it called for severance of diplomatic and economic relations with Franco's Spain and Peron's Argentina, both of them "breeding places of world fascism."

An enduring peace, the resolution pointed out, demands a "free, united and independent China." After praising Pres. Truman's policy directive issued on Dec. 15, 1945, the resolution called upon "all foreign governments, as well as our own, to cease intervention in Chinese affairs."

From Leon Jouhaux, a WFTU vice-president and secretary of the French labor federation, the convention heard greetings from world labor.

Jouhaux lashed out at Dictator Franco of Spain. "Franco, of course, is a fascist," he said. He added sarcastically, "according to certain governments he is fascist of a particular kind, who does not constitute a threat to world peace.

"Franco, we say, is a danger to the peace of the world. Franco must be eliminated because the Spanish people have won the right, by their long fight, to regain their freedom and liberty."

HOLDERMAN OPENS CONVENTION

The CIO convention was opened by Pres. Carl Holderman of the N. J. CIO Council.

Holderman declared that reactionary forces, by their cries of Communism and socialism, "frightened the American people into returning our government to the control of big business."

He paid tribute to the memories of Franklin Roosevelt and Sidney Hillman, "whose genius for political organization made the CIO an influential force in every political campaign."

Referring to the part the CIO has played in war and in peace, Holderman said, the CIO has brought new hope for a fuller life to millions of workers."

CIO URGES BETTER DEAL FOR VETS

A 10-POINT program for veterans including a demand for lifting the $200 a month ceiling for the on-the-job training program was set up by the CIO convention.

The program also calls for increased allotments for veterans education and subsistence during schooling, higher benefits for disabled ex-servicemen and their dependents, and the raising of Federal unemployment insurance for vets to a minimum a $25 a week for two years from the present $20 a week for a year.

More liberal provisions for loans to veterans to purchase homes, businesses and farms is demanded as well as real priority and small lot sales to veterans of surplus war property.

Other planks of the wide veterans' program are full protection of their job rights, protection of the on-the-job program from subsidization of business and of the ex-servicemen taking the training from frauds; democratization of our armed forces, union management cooperation in matching disabled veterans to jobs, and mustering-out pay for those discharged from the armed forces to resume essential civilian occupations.

The CIO Veteran's Committee met following the passage of the resolution to implement the program. Chairman Clinton S. Golden and Meyer Bernstein, his assistant, reported on the committee's work.

OPPOSITION to peacetime military conscription was voiced by the delegates. This resolution said the drive for continuation of compulsory military training "carries serious dangers for our own democracy at home and the maintenance of world peace," and "in an era of atomic energy affords no assurance of actual protection against attack."

The convention recognized the obligation to assure sufficient occupational forces to carry out the nation's duties, but declared that enough troops could be obtained through voluntary enlistment coupled with democratization and improvement of the armed forces.

Pointing out there are 1,000 conscientious objectors still in prison and 5,000 others punished by the loss of civilian rights, the convention in another resolution asked the President to proclaim amnesty for these groups.

HAIL WAR RELIEF

Appreciation for the "humanitarian achievements" of the Natl. CIO War Relief Committee (now called the Community Services Committee) during the war years was expressed in a resolution passed at the CIO convention.

Another resolution on the American Red Cross urged the ARC to cooperate with organized labor in all its activities and to provide adequate labor representation on both the national and local bodies.

ASK ANTI-BIAS LAWS

IN TWO resolutions urging the U. S. Government to take the lead in uprooting racial bigotry and alleviating the plight of oppressed peoples, the CIO called for rigorous legislation which would make discrimination, segregation and anti-semitic activity a federal crime.

The CIO called on the U. S. to open its doors to the thousands of homeless Jews in Europe and to bring pressure upon Great Britain for the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews to Palestine, followed by free and unlimited immigration and land purchase in the Holy Land.

In accordance with promises made to the Jewish people in the Balfour declaration, the resolution sought action to bring about the establishment of a permanent homeland for the Jewish people as an independent commonwealth.

The resolution denouncing ill-treatment of Negroes urged effective enactment of permanent federal, state and municipal FEPC legislation, a federal anti-lynching bill, outlawing of discrimination and segregation in the nation's capital, invalidation of existing Jim Crow regulations, safeguards against discriminatory use by the states of federal funds, federal protection of civil rights and the right of suffrage, and removal of the ban against Negro newspapermen from the Senate and House press galleries in Washington.

Denouncing police officials as having been responsible for the devastation of an entire Negro community in Columbia, Tenn., and for the death of a Negro soldier in Freeport, Long Island, the convention pointed out that police brutality was finding expression as well in strike-breaking attempts

"This is an era which requires special vigilance to protect and expand the doctrines of democracy upon which our nation is founded," the resolution stated. "It is an era which calls for vigorous action to combat racial and religious discrimination wherever it rears its head . . . and to protect in every detail the rights and privileges of minority groups."

First Year at Willow Run...

KAISER AND FRAZER LOOK BACK ON A YEAR OF PROGRESS

Just one section of the giant 80-acre ex-bomber plant at Willow Run, Michigan, as it appeared when Kaiser-Frazer and Graham-Paige took it over, only one year ago.

Today Willow Run presents a far different picture, as hundreds of KAISER SPECIAL and FRAZER motor cars move steadily along the production lines to the loading docks. Already employing more than 5,000 people, Willow Run is rapidly increasing production—to supply more automobiles and farm equipment to a nationwide sales organization of 4,472 dealers and distributors.

Henry J. Kaiser, Joseph W. Frazer and their cars at Willow Run.

With shipments mounting daily, the KAISER SPECIAL and the FRAZER are fast becoming familiar sights in every part of America. Their advanced styling, their extraordinary performance, their road-sure safety, smoothness and comfort are making motor car history. The accomplishments in this first year at Willow Run have been hailed as an industrial miracle.

EISENHOWER DEPLORES TALK OF INEVITABLE WAR

HAILED by CIO Pres. Murray as the "Kansas boy who whipped Hitler," Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Chief of Staff, this week received a rousing ovation when he addressed the CIO Convention after being escorted to the speakers' platform by a committee of ex-GI delegates.

Applause greeted both his statement that "we must maintain a protective shield adequate to our needs" until nations abandon the use of force, and also his assertion he deplored "talk about the inevitability of war."

Gen. Eisenhower called for "unstinted support" for UNO and declared:

Selfish interests—as well as altruistic impulse — dictate unswerving devotion to the cause of permanent peace, and its promise of universal disarmament. If our American democracy is proved workable despite our differences of race, religion, origin and group objectives, surely it can be made to work among nations of differing governmental systems, provided there is mutual respect and understanding."

His declaration that until force is abandoned by the nations the U. S. would have to maintain an adequate military force was followed by the expression of fear that further reduction of the army would invite unrest in the nations where America has been designated by the United Nations to maintain order.

He said that the present short Army term causes a rapid turnover of military manpower resulting in inefficiency, that the Army's aim was three-year voluntary enlistments and that he appreciated "your help in this continuing effort toward efficiency and economy."

Gen. Eisenhower, who spoke while plans were being made to send troops into the coal fields where miners are striking, acknowledged that some persons "have expressed a reluctance that soldiers might be used as agents of some aspiring dictator in oppressing the rights of the people—American soldiers have died in many lands to defend the freedoms we prize—we the living, strive to serve the real commander of the American Army, the people themselves."

Friendly welcome was accorded Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, chief of staff, by Pres. Murray and all the other delegates. The "Kansas boy who whipped Hitler" was a hit.

TRAINMEN TO INTENSIFY POLITICAL ACTION

THE hand of cooperation extended in the past was pledged for the future to CIO by A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, speaking at the CIO convention.

The BRT, he said, will intensify its political activity.

Warning that "labor's hard-won rights are under ever-increasing attack," Whitney praised CIO and Pres. Murray for cooperating with other labor organizations in the fight for the workers' common welfare.

He said that the CIO Political Action Committee has done a good job, and that BRT will continue to work with it.

"The BRT," he said, "was active throughout the country in the recent election and we expect to become more active in 1948. Our convention which closed only 12 days ago approved a greatly expanded information service whereby we expect to help our members discharge adequately the duties of intelligent citizenship in this increasingly difficult age."

"We recognize," Whitney said, "that the Truman Administration has gone Republican."

WHITNEY warned the delegates that there are three main dangers to unions:

1. Sapping of union militancy.
2. The propaganda of reactionary force in the employer press, which seeks to turn union members against their leaders.
3. The danger of issues tossed into the rank of labor in an effort to divide them, weaken their strength and hamper their program.

"Many urgently needed economic reforms," Whitney said, "are labeled communistic in an effort to defeat them.

"Do not let this issue divide you," he urged. "If you do, labor will be set back many years in its struggle to achieve dignity and security and freedom for the average man and woman."

SCHWELLENBACH HAILS CIO RECORD

"LABOR'S AIMS are the common heritage of a freedom-loving nation," Sec. of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach told a cheering CIO convention last week at Atlantic City, N. J.

It was the Labor Secretary's first appearance before a big CIO gathering since his appointment to the President's Cabinet last year.

"The CIO has helped to make collective bargaining an integral part of our industrial structure," he told the delegates.

Your officers and members have helped to establish this democratic procedure in many of our great industries, industries that hold the key to your welfare and to the welfare of the nation."

In the course of his speech, Schwellenbach appealed to labor to consider the needs of all groups within the community and he hailed the broad approach of CIO to all national problems.

"Today as never before," he said, "organized labor has a real voice in fixing the terms of this social contract—for it is a social contract which industry and labor are in the process of writing.

"That is why I have repeatedly urged organized labor to look beyond the immediate interests of its own members and identify itself still more closely with the interests and problems of other groups. And unless I am mistaken, unless I misjudge the caliber and purpose of this convention, you will do just that."

Schwellenbach, recalling the courage and faith of the late Pres. Roosevelt in the American people, added:

"There is no force in the world strong enough or sufficiently sinister to destroy the American concept of democracy. Given that faith and that courage, we can and will carry on with a vision that is clear, with hearts that are undaunted.

"There need not be and there must not be any by-pass towards the goal of American political and economic democracy."

HOW ANTI-SEMITISM HELPED CRUSH UNIONS

IT WAS under the guise of anti-semitism that Hitler struck down the trade unions and all other democratic groups in Germany, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise said this week in a moving speech at the CIO convention.

You could have heard a pin drop as the CIO delegates crowded together at tables on the floor and visitors hanging over the rails in the gallery listened intently to the deep, melodious voice of Rabbi Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress, warn of the evils that lurk under cover of prejudice.

"Anti-semitism stems from the madness of racism," he said. "This is its origin but not its end. First implicitly and later explicitly, as in the rise of anti-Semitism, racism utterly denies the fundamental premises of democracy."

Let us never forget, he said, that for the ten long impenitent years from 1923 to 1933, 'anti-Semitism was nothing more than a winning election slogan, the election slogan of Naziism," but as soon as Naziism won in January, 1933, "it first of all struck down labor unions, the very powerful democratic labor unions of Germany, robbed them of their large funds, imprisoned or slew their leaders, and this process was renewed wherever, moving under the banners of anti-Semitism, the Nazis overwhelmed other lands.

"Everywhere Hitler crushed the power of labor unions as did Mussolini before him, because the labor movement is the basis of democracy."

The real and ultimate objective of anti-Semitism, the rabbi declared, "is the destruction of all that political and economic democracy means." When you resist anti-Semitism, he told the CIO delegates, "you are strengthening the forces that battle to preserve democracy."

FOR BETTER DEAL FOR FARMERS

FULL support to agricultural workers who are now treated "as second class citizens and denied the basic rights guaranteed by law to other workers" was pledged by the CIO convention.

Pointing out that these workers are forced to live at substandard levels which are a threat to the living standards of industrial workers, the convention called upon Congress and other Government agencies to extend coverage of the Natl. Labor Relations Act, Fair Labor Standards Act and the Social Security Act to agricultural labor.

In another resolution on Relations with Farmers, the CIO convention called attention to the attempts of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and other reactionary groups to promote an "intensive hate-labor campaign beamed especially on the rural sections of the country," and proposed a plan of action to combat this.

Action recommended included formation of joint farm-labor committees and conferences, interchange of farmer and labor speakers, and distribution of information pointing out the common problems and interests of the two groups.

AID PANAMA DRIVE

The Panama Canal Zone authorities were called on in a CIO convention resolution to end discriminatory practices against employes in the zone where the Public Workers have organized 17,000 workers whose average wage is $13 a week.

The CIO pledged support for "legislation to establish a decent minimum wage with actuarily just and sound pensions for the workers of the Canal Zone."

LABOR IN FIGHT

He said their goal is to say: "Let the struggle be between the courts, by way of injunctions, and the labor unions. Let the struggle be, through criminal prosecutions, against the labor unions and their leaders, and the unions themselves.

"And management sits back and says, 'We are neutral in this fight.' They don't have to use the weapons of old. They have a new approach today — it costs more money, but it seems to me more deadly to the labor unions."

IN ITS resolution on anti-labor legislation, the CIO charged that the federal government has "unfortunately yielded" to pressure from reactionary quarters.

"With the election of the 80th Congress," the CIO statement continued, "the anti-labor conspiracy of American employers, which has never given up its open-shop dreams, has gained a new impetus.

"The basic rights of labor guaranteed in the Wagner Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act are in danger as never before.

"The right to organize, to bargain collectively, to picket, to strike—rights which have won recognition only after decades of struggle — may well be swept away unless labor, acting together with other democratic groups in the community, is vigilant."

CIO members were also reminded that there is danger in neglecting the fight in defense of labor rights in each state.

The resolution pointed to increasing numbers of laws among the states directed at helping bring about the return of the open shop, the yellow-dog contract, and industrial espionage.

Members of all unions were called upon to join with other labor and progressive groups to seek the repeal of such legislation. CIO urged all state organizations to seek the enactment of a "constructive, forward-looking" program aimed at improving the living standards of the people.

TRUMAN SENDS GREETINGS

PRESIDENT TRUMAN sent his greetings to the CIO Convention declaring that he regretted "very much" his inability to attend it. Complete text follows:

"I very much regret that I cannot join you in the Eighth Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Officially you are a young organization. But the CIO had its real beginnings in the long-held hopes and aspirations of many millions who sought a better life for themselves and their families.

"Fundamentally the goals of this great organization concerned human dignity, human welfare and basic human welfare and basic human rights. That is the true meaning of a labor movement. It has to do with food and shelter and the kind of chance that children will have in this world.

"Some years ago this Nation began to shake off the economic sleeping-sickness which had paralyzed its industries and its people. We did so with a firm determination to give human rights first place in all of our undertakings. The great majority of us know that this demanded higher labor standards, increased security and wider opportunities for employment, just as it demanded increased devotion to the democratic principles of freedom and fair play by which men live and nations endure. You may be proud that you have played an important and vital part in the progress that has been made toward that goal.

"THIS progress is also a measure of your responsibility. For during these epoch-making years organized labor has won for itself an honored place in the councils of American democracy. Union leaders and union members have established collective bargaining as an integral part of our industrial structure. That is as it should be, for free collective bargaining constitutes the most democratic and flexible way of drawing the social contract between labor and management. These agreements between labor and management touch not only the lives of wage earners and the profits of employers—together they affect the stability and balance of our whole economy.

"Too often in the past the terms of this contract were fixed by raw economic power which took no account of human values or human needs. Inevitably this lack of moral law had its economic counterpart—depression. Today we are seeking an economic balance, a social contract, which will insure full production and fair distribution within the framework of a free society. That is a task which demands the hearty cooperation of industry, labor and a Government dedicated to the common good.

"THESE are exciting and dangerous times. For if the months ahead usher in a period of inaction or reaction, if we again put profits above people, we will jeopardize the very structure of our free society. If we write a social contract which violates the moral code or endangers the economic balance, we shall invite disaster. So in offering my greetings to the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I urge all of its members to prove, as they did during the war, that their aims and purposes are the common property of all who labor.

"You have a place at the council table of democracy—proclaim again your resolve to safeguard and enhance the precious freedoms which you have helped America win."

Lee Pressman, secretary of the Resolutions Committee, which was headed by Van A. Bittner, reads a proposal to the Convention as Pres. Murray stands by.

OUST-BILBO GROUP

A Nat. Committee to Oust Bilbo, created to rally national support for Senate action on unseating Bilbo, was announced today by Quentin Reynolds and Vincent Sheean, co-chairmen of the committee.

Organized to make effective the present widespread sentiment for barring Senator Bilbo from the new Senate, the Committee is spearheading a popular petition campaign urging the Senate to act on charges that he won re-election through fraud and intimidation.

"The charges of violence and intimidation now before a senate committee were signed by a group of courageous Mississippi voters, largely through the assistance of the Civil Rights Congress," Reynolds explained.

"Ousting Bilbo would not only remove an avowed member of the Ku Klux Klan from the Senate," he declared, "but would represent a setback for the system of terror, disfranchisement and race supremacy which Bilbo typifies.

ROB STRIKERS OF RIGHTS

Five hundred laundry workers in Winston-Salem, N. C., on strike against $12 and $13 weekly paychecks, are being deprived of their constitutional liberties by persecutions, arrests, excessive bail and outrageous prison sentences, the CIO Fur and Leather Workers Union charged this week.

Assigned by the CIO to this jurisdiction, IFLWU Local 420 organized the laundry workers, the overwhelming majority of whom are Negroes. The strike against five laundries was called Oct. 16 after the employers fired union leaders and locked out other groups of workers.

Of 11 strikers arrested on the picketline in one week, six were given sentences by Judge Leroy Sams ranging from three to 18 months on charges of alleged assault. Bail for the defendants was originally set by the same judge at $17,000.

When the union's attorney charged that the sentences and bail were excessive, Sams replied: "I meant it to be." Later, however, he reduced the bail to $13,900. The union is appealing the convictions.

The strike, which has crippled laundry service, is winning widespread support from other unions, the Natl. Negro Congress, the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People as well as churches and civic bodies. Aside from wage increases, the strikers are demanding sanitary working conditions and union recognition.

FISH SUIT RAPPED

Action by the U. S. Department of Justice against a small group of fishermen, Local 36 of the CIO Fishermen's Union, under the guise of "anti-trust" activity, was soundly denounced by the CIO convention.

Pointing to the Department's failure to prosecute "those powerful combines and gigantic trusts which constitute the true violators of the anti-trust laws of this country, the resolution called for an end to this attempt to deprive the fishermen of their right to organize in self-protection against the powerful interests which control their livelihood.

The fishermen, charged with "restraint of trade," earned an average yearly livelihood of $3,000.

HIT PROHIBITION

CIO is opposed to prohibition and will aid the CIO Brewery Workers in campaigning against its return, a Convention resolution declared.

The resolution said that prohibition had proved a practical failure, and that it had "created the gangster and the racketeer; increased the alcoholism and drunkeness rate in the U. S.; led to the corruption of our youth; and made lawbreakers and hypocrites of our citizens."

TEXT OF PRESIDENT MUR

The following is the text of a speech by President Murray at the opening session of CIO Convention.

CHAIRMAN Holderman, Father Zeger, distinguished guests, fellow delegate and friends: I can't but give expression of heartfelt appreciation to the delegates attending this convention for the warmth of your greeting here this morning.

This, to my mind, will undoubtedly prove to be one of the most important conventions ever held in the history of this great movement and it will prove to be a unified convention of representatives of all organizations affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organization.

I regard a convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations as the greatest parliamentary body of workers anywhere in the entire universe.

The record of our organization, together with its constructive considerations to the many questions which have presented themselves to it in the course of its career, demonstrates the fitness of our organization to arise to the needs of any occasion.

And of course this Eighth Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, like preceding conventions, will necessarily concentrate its considerations upon matters of outstanding importance.

In that regard it may not be amiss for me at this juncture to state to the convention that without doubt the most important consideration to be presented will be the economic or wage aspects of collective bargaining deliberations that are bound to ensue in conferences of many of our International Organizations following the adjournment of this convention.

I might point out, in that regard, a brief historical resume of certain things that come to my mind at the moment. In so doing I must refresh the memories of those who are privileged to represent our organizations in this convention about the history of the CIO wage struggle in the latter part of 1945 and the early part of 1946.

Amalgamated Clothing Workers Delegates

Following the ending of Japanese hostilities in August of 1945, industry in the United States, for the most at least, was required to meet its peacetime reconversion needs—to lay off multitudes of men and women who had, during the course of the war, been gainfully employed in mines, mills, factories, shops, offices and in the fields.

During the early period of reconversion, industry assumed direct responsibility for all of the programs incident to the expeditious reconversion of our manufacturing enterprises from wartime to peacetime needs.

The American workweek was shortened from something approximating 54 to 60 hours to something less than 40 hours. The shortening of the workweek eliminated overtime payments and cast a rather heavy economic shadow over the homes of millions of workers throughout the United States, because the shortening of the workweek and the discontinuance of overtime payments resulted in substantial losses in the weekly earnings of American wage earners.

Hence, to meet the economic needs of the people, this mighty organization undertook the direct responsibility of formulating the wage programs designed to furnish enough money to the wage earners in this nation of ours, first, to provide them with the essentials of life, and, secondly, to provide the necessary purchasing power essential to the acceleration of speedy reconversion and full employment.

IN the course of our wage consideration during the latter part of 1945 and the early part of 1946, this organization contended that the profit-making aspects of the industrial picture were such that American industry could absorb the payment of a substantial wage increase without necessarily increasing prices. When argument was adduced by representatives of CIO organizations to that effect, the employers of labor in making answer observed that they would have to secure price increases.

For a period of approximately four to five months, beginning with the latter part of 1945 and continuing through to the early spring of 1946, this wage struggle continued—the wage earners contending that they needed the money, they needed the bread, they needed the butter, they needed the shelter, they needed the clothing, they needed the medicine.

However, the Office of Price Administration, which was in existence during those days, saw fit to break down completely the barriers of price control. In extraordinary if not altogether humiliating fashion, the OPA acceded to the demands of the employers in elevating the prices of particular commodities until these prices reached almost unbelievable inflationary trends.

Well, it is not for me to recall the history of the strikes that took place in the early part of 1946. That is history. But it might be advisable, under the circumstances, again to refresh the minds of the delegates as to the attitude assumed by this organization in the course of those wage deliberations before strikes even took place. And I do so to again pointedly bring to the attention of the American people through the medium of this convention one extremely important and incontrovertible fact.

That is this:

No organization affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations in the early part of 1946, whilst the nation was undergoing the rigors of its wage struggles, precipitated a strike. Not a single solitary organization affiliated with this CIO movement in the early part of 1946, of its own volition, precipitated a strike. I have but to point to the record. The record speaks for itself.

The mighty steel industry, which, by the way, is regarded as a barometer for matters affecting trade, wages, and so forth, shall be used at this juncture as an example, because it was out of that industry's period of collective bargaining, if one should call it such, that the original 18½ cent per hour pattern was evolved and applied to most of major basic industry in the United States of America. A record, therefore, of some of the things that transpired in the course of those collective bargaining deliberations might be of some interest, even at this moment.

The United Steelworkers of America endeavored earnestly and with all of the sincerity at its command to effectuate a peaceable collective bargaining agreement with the major companies in the steel industry. Our collective bargaining efforts broke down.

We failed in that effort. When failure in that stage of the proceedings became known, the President of the United States of America asked for a conference with Mr. Fairless and me at the White House.

In the course of that conference, the President of the United States asked me, as the agent of the United Steelworkers of America if I would delay the calling of a strike in the steel industry for one week. This was to provide him with the opportunity to look into the matter to see what it was that he could do, as the representative of the American people, to bring about agreement between the conflicting parties.

We responded to the President's appeal. We called our strike off and the President assumed the role of mediator, conciliator and arbitrator. He heard all of the pertinent testimony from both the representatives of the steel industry and of the United Steelworkers of America.

In the course of that week he rendered a decision—he, the President of the United States, rendered a decision. Speaking for the people, representing all of the people, he rendered a decision. The Union accepted the decision of the President of the United States and the steel industry politely told the Government, through the President, that they were not going to accept his recommendation.

A strike took place—a strike that lasted for a period of approximately three weeks. Who—was to blame for that strike? I ask those in this hall and the multitude of people, members and non-members of labor organizations, outside this hall, who, under those conditions should be held responsible for the steel strike? The steel industry had definitely and very arrogantly said to the President of the United States "We will not accept your decision."

It was the heart and the core of Big Business striking against its government, striking against a decision made by the President of the United States of America. The steel industry continued its strike against this government of ours for a period of three weeks, until it defeated the will of the people and it defeated the government of the United States.

Wage increases amounted to a figure approximating $165,000,000 for all of the employees in the basic manufacturing steel industry. But the steel industry eventually perfected an agreement with the United Steel Workers of America only after the Office of Price Administration and the Director of Economic Stabilization had acceded to their demands and accorded them price increases approximating $300,000,000 for a $165,000,000 wage increase.

I take you now to the automobile industry, where experiences were undergone due to strikes. In that situation the Government of the United States appointed a fact-finding board—a board to ascertain all of the pertinent facts involved in the issue which presented itself at that time to both the union and the industry. In the automobile situation the fact-finding board found for a wage increase approximating 18½c. The union accepted. The industry refused.

Brewery Workers Delegates

URRAY'S KEYNOTE SPEECH

A protracted strike ensued. And who was responsible for the continuation of that strike? Again a CIO Union had accepted a Government verdict. The industry had refused to accept it, hence the public had to be discommoded and the people had to suffer, strikers had to go without bread and butter and the other necessaries of life because the automobile industry, in its arrogance had said No, No to another government agency.

ANOTHER all-important fact that might be pertinent to this particular wage issue and which also will refresh your memories, was the experience which another CIO organization had to undergo. I speak now with particular reference to an investigating committee of impartial conciliators, mediators, fact finders or arbitrators.

This committee, composed of Arthur Meyer and William H. Davis, was named to look into the situation affecting the strike of the United Electrical Workers at the properties of the Westinghouse Manufacturing Company. And what happened there?

After some extended hearings before this investigating board, the Westinghouse Manufacturing Company walked out of the meetings. It refused to accept governmental mediation. It struck against the union, it struck against its employees. It defied the Government of the United States, that had selected a fact-finding board to make certain recommendations affecting that situation.

Why was the oil strike a protracted strike? It is true the oil strike was called before any fact finding board was appointed. It is, nevertheless a fact that the Government of the United States did appoint a fact-finding board that found and made recommendations, and the oil industry, for all practical purposes, refused to accept the findings of that board, necessitating an extended strike.

What happened with reference to the packinghouse dispute? There again, another fact-finding board was appointed. And there again was evidenced unwillingness on the part of the major packers of this country to accept a decision from a governmental agency.

I could continue enumerating other specific situations where strikes occurred in the early part of 1946. But I do believe that from these examples it should become evident to any fair-minded man or woman that the CIO in the early part of 1946 and the latter part of 1945, displayed the keenest interest in the protection of not only the interest of its own members, but the interests of our country and also the acceleration of the very necessary reconversion needs of the people of the United States.

I point these facts up for the purpose of making one assertion that the public press, which in too many instances has resorted to the use of diabolical slander and misrepresentation, should now take occasion to tell the truth and nothing but the pure unadulterated truth.

SINCE our experiences of last spring and last winter other things also have transpired. When our original 18½ cents was accorded us in the early part of the present year, American labor had a Presidential understanding. Everybody was aware of it.

That Presidential understanding emanated from our government's economists who prepared an exhaustive study for the consideration of the President of the United States as early as a year ago last August.

In that study prepared by White House economists, there was submitted to the President of the United States, through the Director of Economic Stabilization and by the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, a factual report, which suggested as early as September, 1945, that American business, by and large, could afford to make possible the payment of 24 per cent in wage increases without necessarily disturbing or agitating any inflationary spirals in this country.

That was not a CIO report. It was not a biased report emanating from research organizations attached to CIO. That was a government report submitted to the President of the United States by his own employes, employes of the Government of the United States. This is a matter of record.

All right. Out of that record came the conviction on the part of the President of the United States of America that these substantial wage increases which later were to be accorded to American labor could be conceded by American industry without necessarily either agitating or disturbing the inflationary spiral. The President of the United States so stated.

BUT what has happened since that time? What has happened to this economy? It might be interesting to reveal some of the almost startling revelations that have occurred in the course of the past five or six months.

Certainly, the 18½ cent wage increase has been completely wiped out. Certainly, it is true that a Steelworker's wage, which amounted to $56.32 in March of 1946, is now $43.28, based on the value of his earning power. So as a potential consumer, as a worker, a man obligated to raise and protect a family under our American system, his earning status in life, now is $13.04 less today than it was in March of last year.

Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Delegates

Rather startling—rather startling, but nevertheless true. That happens to be the status of the American wage earner today.

What has happened to the employer in the meantime? What has happened to the employer interests in the United States in this period to which I make reference is very interesting.

In the year 1939, the year prior to the war—and that was accepted as sort of a year that should be used for the purpose of balancing things during the war. In the year 1939 corporate profits after taxes were five billions of dollars here in the United States.

Shall we follow through from 1944 until now? What is it now? What sort of a financial status do they occupy now compared to the peak period during the war? Is it less than it was in the peace period of 1939? Is it less than it was during the peak period of 1944?

No; no. To the contrary, evidence adduced, facts reported, emanating from governmental sources, indicate that profits for the last quarter of 1946 can reap for American corporate interests a fifteen billion dollar profit predicated upon that rate for the last quarter of 1946.

This is an unprecedented profit, a higher profit than ever experienced at any time in the history of American business.

WILL you take time to contrast that profit picture of American corporate business, as against that of the American wage earner today? The American wage earner, whose living status is now $13.04 per week less than it was in February and March of 1946.

I say that a fifteen billion dollar profit for American industry constitutes a threat to our national economy, and a graver threat to the maintenance of our system of free enterprise in the United States of America.

IT IS asserted that certain interests here in the United States threaten our institutions and threaten our form of government—and I speak now with particular reference to allegations made concerning the Communist Party.

But what could constitute a graver threat to the perpetuity of our free existence in the United States of America, our democratic way of life in America, than this fiscal picture that I have taken the privilege of presenting to you here in this forenoon session of this convention? It is a far greater threat than anything which ever presented itself to the people of the United States.

THERE are other aspects of this situation to which I must necessarily direct your attention before the convention is called to order. Some people here in our country have the peculiar notion that as a result of the Republican landslide in the elections of November 5th, the Republican Party has been given a mandate to do certain things to American labor.

Is there anyone in this convention hall, or any sincere thinking individual anywhere in the United States of America, who could believe in the innermost recesses of his heart, his conscience, his mind, that the voters of the United States of America gave to the Republican Party a mandate to put a cross on the back of labor, march it to Capitol Hill, and there in public gaze witness the actual crucifixion of American labor?

Can anybody believe that? Does the Republican Party believe that? Do the leaders of that party believe that? If they do, they are making a grave mistake. No, they can't do that to the American people.

I witness sometimes with awe the reaction of certain elements of our society to things that are transpiring in our midst. I often wonder why it is that people in many other lands, following the recent election, view with a degree of suspicion the motives of certain people here in the United States of America—why is there belief in many quarters that our money is being utilized for the purpose of changing the thinking of people in many countries, in the distribution of relief, in the lending of money and in other ways.

It would indeed be regrettable and most unfortunate if the lending, gift-giving propensities of the American Government should be utilized for the purpose of forcing our way of thinking down the throats of many people, all over the world.

I make this assertion because that kind of thinking is going on in many places throughout the world. It is the business—it is the duty of the Congress of Industrial Organizations to direct the attention of the American people to such foolhardy policies.

COUNCIL RULES AMENDED

See Full Text—Page 16

MACHINERY for increasing the uniformity of CIO Councils and for assuring their compliance with national CIO policies is provided by amended council rules adopted last week by the CIO Executive Board at Atlantic City.

An amendment to Rule 8 governing council powers provides that "union councils shall confine their activities to issues of local or state concern and to matters of general policy that have been passed on by the National CIO."

Councils are now barred from sending delegates or making contributions to national organizations not recognized by the national CIO. Under the amended rule, councils are told to seek the advice of the national CIO when in doubt as to CIO policies, but are free to make recommendations on any subject to the National CIO.

Before, amended Rule 8 simply said that councils should assist in organizing workers and should refer applications for membership to the proper CIO national and international unions. Applications falling outside of such bodies were to be referred to the national CIO office for local industrial union certificates of affiliation.

Rule 23 governing compliance of councils with the CIO constitution and rules also was amended. Responsibility for complying with constitution and the rules is now placed on council officers as well as the council itself.

The CIO President is given authority under the amendment to take over the funds and property of any disobedient council after a hearing before a member or members of the CIO Executive Board.

Rule 7 which deals with expulsion or suspension of delegates from councils was amended to provide that a delegate must be a member of an affiliated local union or an accredited representative of its parent organization.

CIO representatives under the amended rule, shall be entitled to the privileges of delegates but shall not be permitted to vote unless they have been selected as delegates by a council affiliate.

Rule 4 which requires that councils shall produce books and records for a duly authorized CIO representative was amended to give the CIO president, his representative or the CIO Executive Board power to make a full audit "of the books, funds, properties and accounts of any council."

Rule 6 dealing with representation and voting of council affiliates was considerably enlarged. A paragraph concerning dues payments was added to Rule 5.

CONSTITUTION CHANGE

A new preamble to the constitution setting forth the ideals of CIO for American workers was adopted by the Atlantic City convention.

The preamble now written into the constitution stresses CIO's belief in the democratic process as against those who would seek to undermine Americans' love for "human dignity" and voices opposition to all those who would exploit the people "in the interest of alien loyalties."

Text of the new preamble follows:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations grew out of the needs of the unorganized workers of America which could be met most of organization. Since its formation in 1935, the CIO has grown strong because the service it has given to American workers has made ours a better America.

"We of the CIO are the sons and daughters of ancestors who came to America to escape absolutism in government, bigotry in religion, and economic exploitation. We of the CIO are proud of ths American quest for liberty and the struggle for equality. We seek, today, to implement this great heritage. We are dedicated to the responsibility of furthering economic opportunity, religious freedom, and political participation.

"Democracy stems entirely from free choice. Diligently practiced, it is the only logical human formula for the attainment of economic and political independence; for the realization of a just and equitable return on one's labor; for guarantees of full and fair employment, of social security, and of the protection of the family as an institution.

"In the achievement of this task we turn to the people because we have faith in them; and we oppose all those who would violate this American emphasis of respect for human dignity, all those who would use power to exploit the people in the interest of alien loyalties.

"The struggle for human freedom is a continuous one. The task of those who would bring security and greater understanding to mankind throughout the world is endless. It is in this all-consuming struggle, however, that men and organizations make their contributions to a better life. Therefore, we in the CIO glory in our heritage and in the hope of our future.

"Racial persecution, intolerance, selfishness, and greed have no place in the human family. We will not be satisfied until ours is a world of free men and women and of happy children.

"it is to these ends that this Constitution of the CIO is dedicated. It is the charter of our lives; through it we seek to maintain and extend liberty and opportunity here and throughout the world."

RESOLUTIONS

The resolutions on this and the following pages were adopted by the CIO Convention, meeting at Atlantic City, Nov. 18-25. The Council rule change was a Board action.

WAGES AND U. S. WELFARE

THE termination of the war and the needs of reconversion created an immediate wage crisis for the American wage earner and a grave threat to the American economy.

The elimination of overtime, down-grading, the transfer of workers from war industries to civilian industries, from high-paid jobs to low-paid jobs, the re-timing of incentive systems and other factors drastically reduced weekly earnings of the vast majority of American wage earners.

The CIO recognized the imperative necessity of substantial wage increases both to preserve the living standards of American workers and to protect the national welfare by maintaining the necessary volume of purchasing power to keep the wheels of industry working.

Although the Administration itself recognized that wage increases were necessary to cushion the shock to American workers and to sustain adequate purchasing power, its wage-price policy sharply discriminated against wage increases and favored price increases.

In the collective bargaining agreements concluded by labor organizations during the early months of this year, labor accepted amounts which fell short of the drastic cuts in earnings which American workers had suffered since the end of the war. In the interest of a stabilized economy labor acceded to official pleas for extended contract terms upon a commitment and assurance by the Administration that the price line would be held.

Immediately after the establishment of the Administration's wage-price policy in February of this year, powerful American employers entered into a conspiracy which sought, through unwarranted price increases, to destroy the living standards of the workers.

This was done by seeking and obtaining from OPA fabulous price increases wholly out of proportion to the wage increases which had been granted. In industry after industry, automobile, grain, electrical, textile and others, huge increases were authorized. In addition, decontrols were obtained from OPA on a wholesale basis. The result of this greedy foray against wage and living standards became apparent long beore the complete destruction of price control.

AS part of this campaign to depress real wage levels, industry then proceeded to launch a ferocious attack against the retention of any form of price control. Still dissatisfied with the fabulous profits made possible by lax enforcement of the OPA pricing standards, American industrial monopoly sought an entirely free hand in its movement against wage and living standards. The attack was based upon the argument and the threat that only high prices would remedy existing shortages of goods and materials.

Profit-hungry lobbies sought to blackmail the housewife hunting desperately for meat, the veteran in search of a home, the starving peoples of the world looking to America for food upon the argument that only with rising prices can full production be obtained.

During the early part of 1946 these same powerful employers persisted in their campaign against American wage standards by denying pleas for wage adjustments to restore cuts in take-home pay and resorted to the iniquitous carry-back provisions of the tax law which subsidized their conspiracy against the public welfare and which permitted them to blackmail labor and the public without financial loss.

AS part of the conspiracy to depress wages, to break the strength of labor, and to gut OPA, industry engaged in a program of deliberately creating scarcities and speculatively hoarding goods. This conspiracy has now borne its bitter fruit. The American people are now faced with the spectre of unlimited price increases and shrinking earnings.

In the midst of this conflict, the role played by so-called leaders of labor outside CIO has been pitiful and in its historic context, tragic. When the successful outcome of the vigorous CIO struggle brought in its wake increases for workers throughout the nation, these leaders of the rocking chair brigade, who had watched the fight from their front porches, leaving their rank and file to fight alone, sought to recover some stature in the eyes of American workers by claiming credit for achieving without strikes those wage increases which came to their membership as a result of the determination and sacrifices of the militant fight of the CIO workers in steel, auto, electrical manufacturing, and other industries.

When big business redoubled the fury of its attack and sought by the final destruction of price control to beat down the gains which American workers had succeeded in achieving, these same so-called leaders of labor not only turned tail to run from the battlefront on which labor sought to protect its living standards, but actually joined the ranks of labor's enemies by mouthing the fraudulent slogans of big business.

As the result of the Administration's policy of a wage freeze and its program of discouraging wage increases, the increases which the workers actually received were totally inadequate to make up for their decline in earnings. By September, 1946, despite the wage increases, weekly earnings in manufacturing industries were far less than in April, 1945.

Moreover, the skyrocketing of prices and the spiraling increases in the cost of living has reduced the worker's earning power by almost one-fourth. With tax deductions—the real purchasing power of workers' income is even further reduced.

But there is no immediate prospect that runaway prices will be checked. By the end of this year further rises in the cost of living are inevitable. With the complete abolition of OPA, industry is running amuck with ever advancing prices; rent increases are imminent. Unless the worker receives substantial wage increases he and his family face dire want.

DESPITE the false propaganda to the contrary by American industry, industrial profits have soared steadily. During the peace-time years of 1936-39, American corporations earned an average of annual net profits, after taxes, of approximately $4 billion During the war years the annual average of net profits, after taxes, increased to approximately $9 billion. It is anticipated that the annual net profits, after taxes, for 1946 will be $11,300,000,000.

It is also anticipated that with continued sustained high production the last quarter of 1946 will show a profit return, after taxes, at an annual rate of approximately $14 billion.

While profits soar the workers' share of the national income steadily declines. Millions of American workers today find themselves totally unable to meet a budget providing for the minimum necessities of living. This situation can only result in an early and inevitable economic depression as in 1929 with the accompanying human misery and chaos.

Under present conditions it is therefore imperative that American industry in collective bargaining give substantial wage increases. Our people must have sustained purchasing power and a decent living wage to avert the swift economic tragedy which now confronts us.

ORGANIZING UNORGANIZED

THIS is a critical hour in the history of American labor. The well-laid plans of organized American employers to destroy the labor movement are now apparent to everyone. The organizational gains of labor of the past ten years are threatened as never before by open-shop employers.

The powerful employer groups in this country are determined that the unorganized masses of workers shall remain unorganized. At this time it is imperative to continue the fundamental task of organizing the unorganized into strong and powerful unions.

The expanded strength and the increased membership of CIO unions is our best defense against the anti-labor plotters of this country. We cannot and will not permit the job of organizing the unorganized to remain half finished.

During the brief history of the CIO Organizing Committee, thousands upon thousands of southern workers have been brought the benefits of collective bargaining. Organization of the southern workers has grown despite an employer-sponsored campaign of terror and repression unmatched in our history.

RESOLVED, (1) That the CIO shall continue its fundamental task of organizing the unorganized into strong and powerful industrial unions. We commend the highly constructive policies and activities of the CIO Organizing Committee in the South and pledge full financial support and the complete cooperation of the CIO and its affiliated unions to the successful completion of its historic task.

(2) We must intensify our campaign to organize in areas where employers have sought to erect barriers of anti-union violence, intimidation, and collusion with public authorities against the right of self-organization.

POLITICAL ACTION

THE results of the November elections have re-emphasized the necessity for the fullest participation by the CIO, its affiliated international unions and its entire membership in the fields of political education and political action. They confront the CIO Political Action Committee with urgent tasks and added responsibilities.

The forces of reaction would like to interpret the gains which they made on November 5 as a repudiation of the enlightened program for a secure and prosperous America in a world at peace which we chartered under the leadership of Franklin Roosevelt. But the people did not vote to scrap that program. They still look forward to the attainment of the Bill of Economic Rights through the establishment of an enduring peace, the planning of a domestic economy which will yield full production, full employment and real security and the strengthening of our democracy to assure political equality and equal economic and cultural opportunities for all men and women of every race, creed and color.

The elections recorded the dissatisfaction of the people with the failure to make progress in the attainment of these goals and in the satisfaction of their basic needs. Millions of potential voters expressed their dissatisfaction by staying away from the polls while others were misled by the demagogy of the Republican high command into voting indiscriminately against the candidates of the party in power. Yet, the election was in no sense a landslide, for an analysis of the returns shows that only a small shift in the vote would have completely changed the results.

THE CIO Political Action Committee came to this election with better organization, more seasoned political experience, and greater activity than in 1944. The international unions and industrial union councils gave full, loyal and energetic support to its work and thousands upon thousands of CIO members lent their tireless and devoted support to the day-to-day tasks of canvassing, doorbell-ringing and organizing to get out the vote.

The effectiveness of our organization was demonstrated in the primary campaigns where CIO-PAC was instrumental in the defeat of many candidates of reaction. It was demonstrated again in the election itself in the many contests where effective organization in support of fighting progressive candidates resulted either in their election or in substantially narrowing the margin of defeat.

The experience gained in this election and the lessons to be drawn both from our successes and our failures must be used, better to equip our organizations to meet the severe tests that lie ahead.

Reaction will utilize its political gains to intensify the attack against the living standards, economic security, and democratic rights and liberties of the people. Recognizing that organized labor is the staunchest defender of the workers and all the common people of America and the greatest force for progress in our nation, reaction will concentrate its attack against us.

The next Congress will undoubtedly witness a new and intensified effort to weaken or destroy the protection given to labor under the Wagner Act and to enact some form of the long series of anti-labor laws with which Big Business has long sought to shackle the labor movement.

We must also be on guard against less direct but no less dangerous assaults upon labor and social legislation by amendments offered under the guise of "perfecting" or "improving" it but actually designed to destroy it.

THE retention of the gains that labor and the common people have won in the past fourteen years and the possibility for further advances will largely depend on the outcome of the struggles which will be fought out in the next Congress.

The first task of the CIO Political Action Committee will therefore be to organize for the fullest participation in these struggles. We must bring the issues facing the people into every shop and every home.

Through the political action committees of the industrial union councils and local union, we must expose reaction's program for America and mobilize the membership of CIO and the progressive forces of every community to resist and defeat that program, and organize full support for those fighting people's representatives who have been returned to the Congress. In carrying forward the fight against the offensive of reaction, we will at the same time be preparing the groundwork for full and effective participation in the local elections of 1947 and the crucial national elections of 1948 and do the basic work necessary to assure the nomination of progressive candidates for these elections.

Reaction has won a skirmish in the continuing battle for social progress. But the forces of the people remain strong and the final decision will be written by them. Organized and united, nothing can stop them in their forward march toward a secure and plentiful America.

RESOLVED, (1) That the CIO Political Action Committee be continued in its present form and as now constituted and that the Committee continue to direct the work of political education and political action of CIO and service, advise and coordinate the work of the political action committees of State and City bodies which are the instrumentalities of the political activity of CIO in the field;

(2) That this Convention urges that each international union give special attention to the work of political action within its organization and take steps to assure the formation of an active, functioning political action committee in every local union.

(3) That this convention pledges the full and wholehearted support of the organizations of CIO to the CIO Political Action Committee and their complete cooperation in the urgent political tasks which it is now called upon to undertake and which require the strengthening and intensification of its work.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

THE Congress of Industrial Organizations is an American institution dedicated to the attainment of its well defined social and economic objectives within the framework of American political democracy.

The basic reason for the organization of the CIO was and continues to be the organization of the American workers into trade unions for the protection and enhancement of their legitimate aspirations in regard to wages, hours and conditions of employment.

The CIO in pursuit of these aims and to protect the security of its members has encouraged its membership to exercise its rights and obligations as citizens of the community by supporting progressive legislation affecting their economic and social well being.

The CIO records with pride its achievements in protecting and enhancing the interests of its members and in providing leadership for the labor movement and the common people in the struggle for a better America. The record of the CIO in raising the living standards of its members, in promoting the well being of all the people, in support of the war effort, in the projection of national plans for the orderly reconversion to peacetime production, in its program of an economy of full employment at decent wages and and full production is unequalled by any other organization in America.

IN our effort to win economic security and social justice and to unite our movement against the forces of reaction and the enemies of democracy, we reaffirm our faith that these goals can be achieved for the American people through the democratic process and without sacrificing any of our basic human freedoms.

The CIO as an American organization has no interest apart from the interest of our people and our country. We stand opposed to all forms of oppression and in favor of the Four Freedoms—freedom of religion; freedom from fear; freedom from want; and freedom of speech for everyone—everywhere.

We stand unswerving in our loyalty to these principles which America symbolizes and will resist with all our might every attempt by elements from within our country or from without to undermine or destroy our free institutions.

In the words of our great President Philip Murray: "We must devote our lives as trade unionists towards the upbuilding of a better life for Americans, and we must pledge only one national allegiance, and that allegiance is to our own country, the United States of America. There can be no difference in point of view regarding those phases of the situation. There should not be. There must not be."

In pursuit of the principles set forth herein and adopted by the CIO Executive Board we, the delegates to the Eighth Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations resent and reject efforts of the Communist Party or other political parties and their adherents to interfere in the affairs of the CIO. This convention serves notice that we will not tolerate such interference.

FOREIGN POLICY

THROUGH bitter sacrifices we have learned that we cannot live independent and aloof from the rest of the world. We know that only on the basis of our good neighborliness with other nations can there be built an enduring peace. The foreign policy of our country must be in the interest of all our people, and not merely for the benefit of a few. Insofar as it assures peace—it protects all nations.

The people demand peace. That is why the United Nations was created. Our nation and its people must give their unstinted support to the United Nations.

Today we find ourselves in world affairs torn with dissension and conflict. Instead of the world preparing for military disarmament there is a race for ever mounting armaments by the separate nations. We know that an enduring peace requires first and above all assurance that there will not be a resurgence of militarism or Nazism within Germany or Japan. For that reason there must be a fulfillment of the agreement between the big powers of the complete demilitarization, utter destruction of all vestiges of Fascism in Germany and Japan, and the complete elimination of the cartels which furnished the economic base for Hitler's and Hirohito's military aggressions.

FASCISM is a disease that spreads to threaten peace and the welfare of all free people. Fascism exists in Franco Spain and in Argentina. That is a threat to all the democratic nations.

We therefore call upon the government of the United States immediately to sever all diplomatic and economic relations with these breeding places of world Fascism and to use its influence with the United Nations to assist the people of Spain and Argentina to rid themselves of this dread disease.

WE know that an enduring peace requires an early agreement among the powers for world disarmament. Grandiose demonstrations of military power through large standing armies, naval power, establishment of worldwide military bases, by any nation, do not lend themselves to establishing mutual trust. As a result, our nation now has an annual military budget of billions of dollars.

We, therefore, urge that the United Nations take early measures for progressive universal disarmament that they may fulfill the declaration in the Atlantic Charter which reads: "All the nations of the world, for realistic as well as spiritual reasons, must come to the abandonment of the use of force."

We know that an enduring peace demands that the people everywhere, in the economic backward or colonial countries be protected in their rights of self-determination and self-government —free from interference or coercion from any source—benevolent or despotic.

We know that an enduring peace demands that there be a free, united and independent China. President Truman's directive of December 15 is an admirable statement of this position.

We call upon all foreign governments as well as our own to cease intervention in Chinese affairs and to end military aid to any faction.

The present Nationalist government must build a democratic coalition of all elements in Chinese political life. On this basis we shall be able to demonstrate our deep friendship for the Chinese people by extending full and generous economic aid.

We know that for the good and welfare of the people of the Western Hemisphere, it is imperative that the Good Neighbor policy initiated by President Roosevelt be continued in full force and effect.

THE people of the war-devastated countries look to us for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction. We dare not fail them. We urge the continuation of UNRRA or the establishment, with our full financial support, of a similar agency controlled by the United Nations dedicated to keep the hungry people of the world from starving.

We urge prompt loans to our needy allies to enable them to buy the raw materials and the tools to rehabilitate their countries. Such loans, at low interest rates, will be good for our allies, for us, for peace.

We also urge that under no circumstances should food or any other aid given by any country be used as a means of coercing or influencing free but needy people in the exercise of their rights of self-government.

THE discovery of atomic energy is to the credit of many nations. We commend our government for its stated conviction that international control of atomic energy, with full power of inspection, and the outlawing of atomic weapons is imperative and feasible.

However, if we are to have peace, the stockpiling of atomic bombs must cease. By this immediate and initial action our nations will strikingly demonstrate that when we say peace, we mean peace.

Our energies and ingenuities should be devoted—not to war and destruction—but to the planned application of the fruits of atomic energy to human good, new benefits to mankind, and to peace and progress.

ABOVE all, the common people of this country demand that there be a fulfillment of the basic policy of our late President Roosevelt for friendship and unity among the three great wartime allies—the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union.

Failure to accomplish this necessarily means dissention and strife in the world and ultimate war. Our great war President recognized that friendship and unity could flow only from understanding, negotiation and agreement and not from maneuver and pressure and denunciation on the part of any of the Big Three who share the major responsibility to the peoples of the whole world for permanent peace.

We reject all proposals for American participation in any bloc or alliance which would destroy the unity of the Big Three. If we fail to achieve unity, then the world faces a war which means destruction of humanity itself. Peace is not merely possible. In an atomic age it is indispensable to the continued existence of the human race.

The people of this and every other nation on earth can accept —can envisage—no alternative.

COUNCIL RULE CHANGES

THE following amendments to the CIO Rules for Industrial Union Councils were unanimously adopted by the CIO Executive Board.

Amendment To Rule No. 4

"The President or his duly authorized representative, or the Executive Board of the CIO may at any time cause a full audit to be made of the books, records, funds, properties, and accounts of any council."

Amendment To Rule No. 5

"Local unions of national, international unions, and organizing committees shall pay per capita tax to the councils to which they affiliate and receive exoneration for the same number of members that they pay per capita tax to or receive exoneration from their respective national, international unions and organizing committees, or in the case of a local industrial union, for the same number of members that they pay per capita tax or receive exoneration from the national CIO."

Amendment To Rule No. 6

"Questions coming before any meeting or convention of a council may be decided by a division or show of hands. In the case of a state industrial union council, a roll call vote may be demanded by the delegates representing 20% or more of the total number of votes at the meeting or convention. In the case of any local industrial union council, a roll call vote may be demanded. by 20% of the delegates present.

"In the case of local and state vote, the delegates of each affiliated local union shall be entitled to cast as many votes as there are members of such affiliate. The votes of any affiliated local union shall be divided equally among its delegates present.

"In the case of local and state industrial union councils, the membership of each affiliated local union shall be based upon its average per capita tax payments to the council and exonerations, for 3 months prior to the month in which the roll call vote it taken; provided that where a national, international union or organizing committee has affiliated with the CIO during such 3 months, its local unions when affiliating with the Councils shall have its per capita tax payments and exonerations computed for the months that such local unions have been affiliated.

"At each convention of a state industrial union council, the officers shall submit to the convention a written list indicating the number of votes and delegates to which each affiliate shall be entitled.

"The national office of the CIO may approve exceptions to this Rule as is may deem desirable in the light of special local conditions."

Amendment To Rule No. 7

"A delegate to a council must be a member of an affiliated local union or an accredited representative of its parent organization. Duly authorized representatives of the CIO shall be entitled to the privileges of a regular delegate except that they shall not be permitted to vote unless they are also duly selected delegates of an affiliate of the council."

Amendment To Rule No. 8

"Local and state industrial union councils shall confine their activities and statements to issues of local or state concern and to matters of general policy that have been passed upon by the national CIO. Council shall take no action or issue statements in conflict with CIO policy. They shall send no delegates or make any contribution to national organizations not recognized by the CIO.

"In case of doubt as to CIO policy or recognition, and on problems of procedure and structure, councils shall consult with and be guided by the advice of the national office of the CIO.

"Nothing in this paragraph shall prevent any council from making recommendations on any subject at any time to the national CIO through CIO channels.

"The national office of the CIO shall have the power to assign duly accredited CIO Representatives to work closely with local and state industrial union councils for the purpose of having such councils comport themslves to the requirements of the policies herein provided."

Rule No. 23 As Amended

"Each Council shall comply with the Constitution of the CIO and Rules governing industrial union councils duly promulgated by the Executive Board. In the event the President of the CIO shall have reason to believe that any Council or officer is failing to comply with any provision of the Constitution or of the Rules, he may institute proceedings upon the alleged violations, upon due notice and hearing before any duly designated member or members of the Executive Board.

"In such case the President of the CIO shall have the authority to notify the council that he has taken custody of all property and funds of the council and may thereupon take such custody of such funds and property, and upon such notification all such funds and property shall revert to the CIO in trust for the council pending the outcome of such proceedings.

"Upon the basis of the hearing, the Executive Board is authorized to render a decision, dismissing the charges of alleged violations, suspending the officer, or suspending or expelling such Council, or directing such other action as may be necessary to secure compliance with the Constitution and Rules, and in the event custody has been taken of the funds and property of the council, the Executive Board may provide for the application and use of such funds and property in a manner consistent with the constitution of the CIO and the rules and with the objects and purpose of the council and its affiliated organizations.

"The decision of the Executive Board may be appealed to the next convention, provided, however that pending the appeal, the decision of the Executive Board shall remain in full force and effect."

THE ANNUAL WAGE

EVERY year thousands and thousands of American workers with long years of seniority are displaced by American industry as no longer fit for service. Since the termination of the war thousands and thousands of older workers at an ever-increasing rate are being forced on the street to face hardship and want without adequate security.

An increasing body of American workers are being pauperized by the ruthless displacement policies of large-scale American industry. They are being discharged and forced to accept totally inadequate government pensions to support them for the remainder of their lives.

In sharp contrast to the general provision made for the old age of corporate officers and executives, modern American corporate employers have tragically slighted the desperate need of the aged worker for security and for an adequate industrial pension.

As a result of health hazards encountered on the job, thousands of American workers are now faced with draining illness and crippling disability. The lack of adequate provision for medical care, for health and hospitalization insurance has needlessly resulted in the destruction of our human resources. Not only the insecurity of old age and the insecurity of ill health, but the insecurity of interrupted and and partial employment plagues the workers of this country.

THE struggle for a guaranteed minimum annual wage at a level sufficient to insure an adequate income is part of the struggle for the preservation of our human resources. But it is more than that. It is a struggle to bring to our economy a stability which will assure a sound economy.

A guaranteed minimum annual wage is a just and sound means of bringing security to workers in industry and at the same time establishing an expanded purchasing power as a foundation for a stable economy.

Security of the worker in his old age, the guaranteed minimum annual wage, adequate sick benefit plans, hospitalization programs and pension plans are all within the scope of collective bargaining. The CIO recognizes that if it is to truly serve its members it must conduct a vigorous collective bargaining program to bring to its members a coordinated program of security benefits.

The collective bargaining relationship must become a means of assuring security to the worker against the hazards created by his employment. Very marked progress in this direction has been made by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the Textile Workers Union, and other CIO unions.

The CIO intends immediately to develop a broad program so that workers may be given a rounded protection in their living standards through collective bargaining contracts providing for adequate pension plans, health insurance plans, group hospitalization programs, and the guaranteed minimum annual wage.

NATL. LABOR RELATIONS

THE National Labor Relations Act was passed to assure to American workers the protection of their fundamental rights to self-organization and to engage in concerted activity and to establish the policy of the United States to encourage collective bargaining.

With the termination of the war, the Act has acquired a new importance. During the immediate post-war period, there has been an alarming resumption by certain groups of American employers of attacks upon labor organizations and upon the right of employes to engage in concerted activity.

Reconversion has also given rise to many vital problems in connection with matters of representation. During this period more than ever the enlightened and effective administration of the Act is indispensable to the protection of the fundamental rights of workers. During this period, however, there have developed tendencies within the National Labor Relations Board to weaken the Act.

There are certain indications that the National Labor Relations Board is in retreat from that vigorous enforcement of the Act which the times require. In many cases the Board has shown itself to be unjustifiably employer-minded; in other cases the Board has processed cases with such destructive delay that the final results, even where they were favorable, failed to accomplish their purpose.

In handling issues involving conflicts between CIO unions and other unions the National Labor Relations Board has increasingly manifested partisanship and a lack of objectivity. In case after case the Board has demonstrated a bias against CIO unions.

We condemn the unwarranted setting aside by the Board of the election in the West Coast canneries in which the Food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers prevailed. This partisan action resulted in the creation of grave jurisdictional strife and in the fostering of the view among the CIO members on the West Coast that the National Labor Relations Board is not an impartial instrument for the elimination of industrial strife.

We denounce the growing tendency of the Board to permit craft groups to be severed from industrial units in disregard of a successful bargaining history on an industrial basis.

The National Labor Relations Board has increasingly lent itself to a sinister campaign to promote industrial strife through raiding by rival labor organizations. In so doing it has flagrantly disregarded its own doctrine that it will not entertain election petitions by craft organizations where there has been a successful bargaining history on an industrial basis. In its zeal to lend itself to the raiding tactics of the AFL, it has even disregarded its own prior decisions refusing to entertain craft petitions.

The National Labor Relations Board was established as an instrument to serve all the workers of this country. It should not be used for the purpose of favoring one labor organization over another.

We demand that the National Labor Relations Board reassert a vigorous, effective and fair administration of the National Labor Relations Act consistent with the basic principles and policies of the Magna Charta of labor.

APPEAL CHAIN GANG SENTENCES

The CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Warkers Union is appealing to the North Carolina supreme court conviction of three strikers who were given heavy chain gang sentences.

Those convicted were FTA Intl. Rep. Phil Koritz, sentenced for one year, and FTA members Cal Robertson Jones and Margaret Degraffenried, sent up for 10 and eight months respectively.

The arrests arose out of a police attack on a picketline during the recent Piedmont Leaf Tobacco Co. strike. The union charged that this was a planned attack, pointing to the arrival on the scene of a news photographer, reporters and carloads of extra police before the incident occured.

Basis for the appeal is the union's charge that the entire jury system of North Carolina is not only discriminatory against Negroes but also against white people. The state requires persons to be owners of real estate in order to qualify as talesmen or special jurymen.

The simplest retirement plan in the world

How much longer do you intend to work—10 years?—20?—30?

How much a month would you like to retire on . . . $50?—$100?

ALL YOU NEED is the answer to those two questions and you can figure how much you need to put into U. S. Savings Bonds now to get the income you want.

Retirement 10 years from now

Two bonds ($18.75 size) a month will give you $50 a month ten years from now for ten years thereafter. That's from 1957-1967.

If you expect to work 20 years more, you can approximately double the amount you will get each month for 10 years. . . . (Or you can easily figure how you can spread the return over a longer period.)

That's all there is to it. Just those good U. S. Savings Bonds bought regularly—and earning interest as sure as school keeps. And because there's a nice cash reserve for emergencies, if you should need a lump of money, you can get it in minutes.

Think about your bond purchases as a sort of retirement plan—your gift of a happy future from you to you. You can get them at any bank or post office.

But the very best way to buy the bonds is through Payroll Savings. Nine chances in 10 your company has such a plan—and once you sign up, they just keep rolling in.

the Communist Party, remember, but other political parties. And I should like to emphasize that point, and there should be no misunderstanding about that, because if you are going to be trade unionists in our concept as we have been, then we must recognize that also to be an outstanding fact.

THE perpetuity of this institution ness to comport ourselves to fundamental trade union concepts of true American trade unionists.

The statement is not susceptible to any misunderstanding or any misinterpretation. It does not convey the impression to a single solitary member of this Union that this organization is going to engage itself in diabolical pursuits. That must not be resorted to.

But as I have already stated, it definitely charts a course, it outlines methods of producers that of themselves will be sufficient to guide the affiliates of this movement in the days to come, with regard to this particular phase of CIO's activities.

I present to you now these points of view which I believe and I hope reflect the attitude of every member of our Executive Board.

In so doing I believe it should be understood that inasmuch as 40 or 41 International Unions, through their international Presidents and the Vice-Presidents of the organization have unanimously ratified a document, when I complete the reading of the paper to the convention I hope the delegates participating in these proceedings will respond with an immediate unanimous rising vote of thanks,—to not me, no, but to the members of your Executive Board for recommending in this form this statement to you.

That type of a policy will obviate the necessity of needless debate upon this subject, because that has already been taken care of in the course of three days' discussion whilst this committee and the members of the Executive Board were giving consideration to it.

So I shall proceed now with the reading of the paper and shall ask you to vote immediately upon it.

OUR PLANT

NOT THE SMALLEST and NOT THE LARGEST

BUT

WE AIM FOR THE HIGHEST PRECISION STANDARDS

At C. M. Smillie Company the objective is not to be the largest in our field. Nor do our present facilities label us as small. We aim at maintaining a reputation for excellence that will be known and valued throughout industry.

Since the founding of the C. M. Smillie Company in 1889, craftsmanship and ingenuity have been the watchwords. To this have been added modern plant facilities including amazingly accurate machines and scientific equipment that coupled with engineering and planning have produced thousands of parts to the highest accuracy.

The C. M. Smillie plant has caused many visitors to remark "the finest plant of its size." We appreciate this. But the efficient layout, the modern machines for every type of operation, a complete tool and gauge department, and inspection equipment—all reflect our basic aim—to operate so as to produce the very best in precision parts that can be made.

Since Victory, this extra measure of value in Smillie precision helps to achieve your product leadership.

UAW URGES BAN ON BIAS IN STATE HIRING OFFICES

THE CIO Auto Workers urged Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach to set up a set of standards for U. S. Employment Service offices that would prevent discriminatory practices in the referral of minortiy group workers.

The UAW-CIO proposal, contained in a letter from Walter P. Reuther, UAW-CIO president and director of the union's Fair Practices Dept. and William H. Oliver, co-director of the Fair Practices Department, was occasioned by the return of the USES offices to state administration as of November 15.

Reuther and Oliver urged Schwellenbach to adopt the set of standards recommended by the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, which are as follows:

"1. No USES office shall accept discriminatory orders for workers from employers.

"2. No USES office shall make referrals of workers on the basis of such discriminatory orders.

"3. No employer shall be permitted to use USES facilities to recruit workers unless he hires on a non-discriminatory basis.

"4. Segregated offices shall be abolished in those areas in which they now exist, and all persons shall have equal opportunity for employment on the staff of USES without regard to race, creed, color or national origin.

"5. The USES program shall contain provisions for the promised full utilization of minority groups in local employment and training programs serviced by the Agency.

"6. State USES programs shall include training and reporting provisions which will insurance the elimination of discrimination . . ."

The letter urged also that the Federal government refuse to grant funds for the operation of USES offices in states where such standards were not met.

British Report Opposes Equal Pay For Women

By Allied Labor News

BRITISH labor's drive to the core of industry's cheap labor supply received a severe setback Nov. 10 when a government-appointed royal commission ended a months-long study with a report opposing equal pay for women workers. In many British industries, women get as little as 50% of the pay given men on the same jobs.

Basis for the commission's recommendation is that women are less efficient and less reliable than men who spend their whole lives at a single trade. The commission also placed considerable weight on the employers' argument that any increase in women's wages would have to be absorbed by price rises.

British unions presented evidence to the commission showing that the acute manpower shortage in many industries has been caused by the withdrawal of women. They pointed out that if the government fails to take a positive stand this movement will be accelerated. It will accentuate the manpower shortage at a time when the government is proposing to drain the labor supply further by a compulsory draft.

Government figures support the union presentation. They show that the number of women in industry, which hit a wartime peak of 3,300,000, has already dropped to the prewar level of 2,250,000. They also show that women have moved out of the low-paid industries in which they predominated before the war.

For example, only 200,000 women were in the chemical, engineering and construction industries in 1939. Today they number 540,000. On the other hand, the number of women in textiles and hosiery has shrunk from 340,000 to 280,000. In the latter industries, important to British export trade, wages and conditions are notoriously poor and there is now a desperate labor shortage.

The numerous unions in which men's scales are directly affected by the employment of women at lower rates are certain to meet the royal commission recommendation with spirited protest.

The London Trades Council, representing 600,000 workers, has already announced its support of a conference on the question on Dec. 7, Intl. Women's Day. Labor delegations are also being organized to visit members of Parliament on the issue.

The pamphlet includes a summary of legislation affecting domestic workers as of Sept. 15, 1946; information on wages, standards and training; and a sampling of wages offered domestic help in newspaper classified ads in March 1945, March 1946 and September 1946.

The section on training contains a list of courses offered in public schools under auspices of the U. S. Office of Education. Recent developments in the field of household employment are cov-

WORLD IN THE MAKING

Watch children build with their sturdy blocks. Compare the imagination, purpose and honesty with which they make their play-worlds to our haphazard way of building and rebuilding their real world. Contrast their determination with our defeatism—our ready acceptance of half truths, our compromise with half way measures. Defeatism is dangerously epidemic today. It offers an easy way out. We must not tolerate it for it imperils the peace and threatens the citizens of tomorrow. (Library of Congress Photo.)

Sprucing Up

READERS WRITE US—

YOU'LL be interested in the answers to two of the letters I have received from readers of this column. These questions are often asked in my student classes. Every few weeks, we'll devote a column to answering your inquiries. Please feel free to write me about your individual problems.

Today's first letter comes from a girl with a figure problem. She writes: "I am 5' 2" tall and weigh 125 lbs. I have read somewhere that I should stick to dark colors if I want to look thinner. Is this so?—D. J."

I'm afraid that's all too true. Bright colors do attract light and tend to make you look larger. But this doesn't mean that you have to dress in drab and unappealing clothes in order to look slimmer.

Some of the other dark colors have more vibrancy than black and still produce the illusion of slenderness. These are navy blue (a color to wear in winter as well as spring,) dark green, brown and deep rich burgundy. These colors are, in fact, much more flattering than black. That's because they don't outline the figure as sharply as black does.

CONTRASTING or light color near the face will flatter you as much as a costume in color and still camouflage figure size. You need not be afraid of colored jewelry, collars and lapels in color, bright weskits and dickies.

Here's another way to add zip to your costume! Buy or make a dress that has a band of color running from neckline to hemline. This should be off center to get the most from it as a slenderizer.

Hats, in a color to match the costume are tallmaking. Remember, the taller you look, the slimmer you appear. Trim your hat in the same contrasting color you used to spice your dress, suit or coat.

ANOTHER reader with a totally different problem, but a familiar one, asks: "What can I do about my hair? For the last several months it has grown rather thin and I have also lost a lot of weight. I have been very worried about this because it has become practically impossible to wear my hair in a becoming style. Have you any suggestions that could be of help to me?—G J. S."

I would advise a check-up by your physician. He can determine whether your metabolism is up to par, whether you need a change in diet, more rest, vitamin pills or exercise. Do this right away since thining hair seldom accompanies radiant health. Your loss in weight seems to indicate this.

Along with this visit to your doctor, try a course of special treatments for your hair. These should include regular massage, with or without a good oil or tonic. Once a day stir up the circulation by massaging your scalp with your finger tips using a circular motion. Then brush your hair. You can improve the appearance of your hair while you are getting at the root of the trouble by cutting off those short straggly ends. I would not advise getting a permanent until your hair and general health show definite signs of improvement.

MURRAY HAILS WORK OF CIO WOMEN

THE WOMENFOLK of the CIO family can do much to help their union husbands, sons and brothers solve pressing economic and social problems, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in a message to fifth annual conference of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries which met concurrently with the CIO convention.

Several hundred delegates from all over the country attended this first postwar conference of the CIO Auxiliaries. Pres. Faye Stephenson and Natl. Director of Organization Helen Blanchard presided.

One of the highlights of the CWA conference was a luncheon given in honor of Mrs. Bessie Hillman, widow of Sidney Hillman, late president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Pres. Murray in a brief talk praised the auxiliaries for their past achievements and urged them to expand their activities.

A tragic reminder of the suffering, despair and sorrow inflicted upon families in war-torn Europe was brought to the delegates by Dr. Vlasta di Lotti, a woman physician and surgeon from Czechoslovakia.

Dr. di Lotti's entire family was wiped out by German storm troopers on V-E day just before the American troops arrived to liberate the town. Her husband and teen-aged son and daughter were murdered in their home and Dr. di Lotti herself was wounded and left for dead.

In her speech Dr. di Lotti stressed the responsibility women have in preserving world peace and in eradicating prejudices which divide people and breed international antagonisms.

The contribution that women of workers' families can make to the legislative and political activities of the CIO was a main topic of discussion at the regular sessions.

A political program adopted by the conference stressed the great need of giving more women the opportunity to get experience for effective political work and called upon CIO-PAC leaders to adopt a policy of including women representatives on all local, state and national committees doing political and legislative work.

A consumer action program approved by the conference urged Auxiliaries to cooperate with all other consumer groups in a drive to mobilize American housewives against inflationary prices and to acquaint them with the justice of the CIO's wage policies.

NOBEL PRIZE WINNER FRIEND OF LABOR

There's a lesson for labor in the award of half the Nobel peace prize for 1946 to Emily Greene Balch of Wellesley, 79, honorary president of the Women's Intl. League for Peace and Freedom.

She took part in the early battles of labor and was one of the founders of the Women's Trade Union League. The late Jane Addams of Chicago was her close friend in settlement house work. Long a friend to political refugees, she is a pacifist who early in the 30's perceived that fascism was "an evil force abroad that had to be met by force."

FOR EQUAL RIGHTS

The struggle to achieve equal rights for women on and off the job through collective bargaining, and legislative and community activities was given strong support in a resolution passed by the CIO convention.

CIO unions were urged to try through collective bargaining to obtain equal pay for women, equal opportunities for promotion and advancement, adequate maternity leave and protection against discriminatory hiring and firing.

The resolution on women also champions all legislation designed to raise minimum wages, shorten hours and improve working conditions for women and urges support for a genuine equal rights bill assuring women full citizenship rights, in place of the fake Equal Rights Amendment touted by leisure-class women and employer interests which would deprive women of present protective legislation.

CIO WOMEN HONOR MURRAY

The CIO Women's Auxiliaries presented CIO Pres. Philip Murray with a basket of flowers tied with a ribbon hand-made by the wife of a steelworker, at a ceremony on the opening day of the CIO convention.

In making the presentation, Auxiliary Chairman Faye Stephenson outlined briefly the work in which the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries was engaged, particularly the campaign in the consumer field against the rising cost of living.

Pres. Murray in reply pledged his continued support and encouragement to the further growth and development of the Auxiliaries and praised the women for the many contributions they had made toward the well-being of the CIO.

CRISIS IN SCHOOLS

AMERICA today is faced with an unprecedented crisis in the public schools which is threatening the very basis of our entire educational system.

As a result of the low pay given teachers and the general underfinancing of the school system, there is a serious shortage of teachers and thousands of classrooms have been closed down.

Facts and figures indicating the seriousness of the situation were laid before the delegates to the CIO convention in a resolution unanimously adopted urging active support of the teacher organizing program conducted by the United Public Workers. The resolution pointed out that:

- More than 350,000 teachers have left their profession since 1939.
- Hundreds of thousands of veterans are unable to take advantage of government educational support because of the lack of sufficient schools, teachers and classrooms.
- In 1940, some two million children from six to 16 were not in any kind of school.
- In thousands of communities Negro teachers and women teachers are receiving unfair and unequal salaries because of race and sex discrimination.

Teachers were urged to unite with other school, City, State and Federal employes by joining the CIO Public Workers and supporting the union's campaign to win higher salaries and other demands.

Delegate Rose Russell, legislative representative, N. Y. Teachers Union, urged all CIO groups to join with teachers in their fight to obtain higher pay. Unions would benefit, she told the CIO convention, by supporting the teachers' struggle to organize and win just demands, for CIO teachers would then be able to present the truth about the aims and aspirations of labor.

AUXILIARIES' WORK PRAISED

The outstanding work done by the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries during the past two years in mobilizing women behind the struggle for CIO policies was warmly praised by the CIO convention.

The women were commended especially for their activities in the struggle for lower living costs and in support of CIO wage campaigns. They have also demonstrated the value of enlisting the women of CIO, through their work on legislation and public relations and through building community support for the CIO stated a resolution passed unanimously.

The CIO delegates went on record in favor of giving the CWA all assistance and urged CIO affiliates "to encourage and expand programs aimed at involving women in CIO families in carrying out the CIO program in every community."

AID TO CHILDREN PUSHED BY CIO

THE CIO's concern for the welfare of the nation's children was expressed in several resolutions setting forth CIO policy on child labor, maternal and child health, and education problems.

The convention urged that minimum educational standards be established by the Federal government based on the principle "that every boy and girl is entitled to free education through high school with advanced study for those of demonstrated ability."

The resolution also called for an adequate nursery school program for children of working mothers, financed by Federal and State funds.

Reaffirming its position that all mothers and children have a right to medical services needed for good health and pointing out that it is the responsibility of government to provide these, the resolution on maternal and child health said the CIO would continue to press for a national health program for all the people.

The resolution supported legislation to help communities provide day care for workers' children; good home care for dependent and neglected children; wholesome recreation and other child welfare services.

In a resolution on child labor, the CIO decided that "a nation as rich as ours in manpower, technical skills, and natural resources has no need to depend on the labor of its children to produce the good living that our economy is capable of providing."

The CIO program calls for legislation to broaden the child-labor provisions and coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act; improve state child-labor laws; and secure adequate appropriations for enforcement, and expansion of public employment services to provide job counseling for young people.

The Hospital Survey and Construction Act, passed by Congress and making available $75,000,000 a year for five years beginning in 1947, was also endorsed by the CIO.

All CIO groups and members were urged to support the "wholesome and democratic administration" of the act which will be administered by the U. S. Surgeon General with the aid of a Federal Hospital Council.

MRS. CLARA TRIMBLE

We'll Strike Until We Win

MRS. Clara Trimble, a 26-year-old widow from Atlanta, Ga., is a symbol of the kind of spirit that is going to make the CIO southern organizing campaign as much a success as the mighty victories in the early days of the auto drive.

In an earnest, pleading voice she told the CIO Convention how 500 Negro women fellow workers have been on strike at the Scripto Pencil Mfg., Co., at Atlanta, and "might be out six weeks more."

Mrs. Trimble, who is president of her local of the CIO Steelworkers, told how CIO and "no union" votes tied in an original election, and how CIO won a second ballot by 19 votes.

"We'd been getting 55c an hour," she said. "No vacations. In the hot weather we didn't even get cold drinking water. There was sick leave.

"Some days we worked 10 hours. The next day the boss would let us work only six hours to avoid paying overtime.

"We started to negotiate last April for a 10c an hour raise and better working conditions and vacations. On Oct. 7 we went on strike.

"The company hired a lot of scabs. The boss tried to buy off individual workers for 5c an hour more. Only 10 went back.

"The city cops are protecting the scabs. The cops let the scabs carry knives and guns and ice picks. They don't keep them in their pockets—they carry them open right in their hands."

Mrs. Trimble said the workers will strike until they win.

"We'll fight. We have the backing of all the Negro people in the South."

EDUCATIONAL BILL BACKED

A bill to establish this service introduced in the 79th Congress calls for an appropriation of $15,000,000 for a labor extension service to make educational facilities to American labor.

CIO Educational & Research Director Kermit Eby explained briefly the purpose of the bill, pointing out that while $44,000,000 a year has been set aside by Congress for education purposes, only $37,000 is available for labor education, and this through a private program functioning in the Dept. of Labor.

He urged all CIO members and unions to aid in the campaign to obtain passage of legislation needed to set up the service.

Chinese Girl At CIO Parley

Sent to America by the CAL, she arrived in this country from Shanghai last month to study American labor.

She plans to attend the School of Industrial Relations at Cornell University for a year beginning with the spring term in February and then to study the trade union movement at first hand during the remainder of her two-year visit. She is particularly interested in education and welfare work.

Miss Lee attended the World Federation of Trade Unions meeting in Paris with the CAL delegation and met members of the CIO delegation at that time.

N. Y. UNIONS BACK ANTI-CANCER DRIVE

A leaflet on cancer is included in each of 200,000 bundles of laundry being delivered by union drivers in N. Y. City. That's just one of the ways organized labor is taking part in a mass cancer education drive where each year 14,000 persons die of the disease.

Indorsed by the N. Y. CIO and AFL central bodies and the Women's Trade Union League, the campaign has 10 union joint boards and 21 AFL and CIO locals actively involved.

Nearly all these unions have distributed cancer literature to their members. Many supplemented this with the use of posters, exhibits, films or lecture programs and informative articles on cancer in their publications.

Primary aim of the campaign is to get more people to act promptly and wisely, according to Exec. Dir. Savel Zimand of the N. Y. City Cancer Committee.

Here's one time it doesn't pay to be foxy!

REMEMBER the old fable of the fox who wanted some grapes that were high on a vine?

After vainly jumping for them a few times, he quit and said, "Oh well, those grapes are sour. I don't really want them anyway."

Sound familiar?

Aren't you sometimes like that fox when it comes to putting away money for the things you want?

You save for a while, then when things become difficult, you quit. You say to yourself, "Oh well, my savings would never amount to much anyway."

You're wrong there! Under the Payroll Savings Plan, your savings really accumulate. As little as $3.75 put into U. S. Bonds through Payroll Savings every week will grow into $1004.20 in five years —$2163.75 in ten years! Higher weekly savings pile up even more.

And think of what those dollars will buy—a new car, many new home appliances, a good education for your children. They can even be a substantial down payment on a fine home, too.

Keep saving!

So . . . don't be a "fox" about your "grapes." Save for the things you want in the future, through regular Payroll Savings!

'NOTHING CAN STOP US IN SOUTH'

Resolution — Page 14

PRES. Philip Murray voiced the determination of the CIO to organize the South when he declared that "nothing under God's sun is going to stop this mighty movement" from the completion of its self-appointed task below the Mason and Dixon line.

Murray was one of a number of speakers who vigorously supported the CIO convention resolution on organizing the unorganized, which called on the CIO and its affiliated unions to give "full financial support and complete cooperation" to the "successful completion of the CIO's historic task" in the South.

Murray recalled the formation of the Committee for Industrial Organization, out of which the Congress of Industrial Organizations grew. The original committee, he said, was set up "11 years ago this month" at a meeting of eight or nine men at the President Hotel in Atlantic City, after the AFL convention refused to form industrial unions to organize the unorganized. He continued:

"So we are going to organize the unorganized, and we are just about as deliberate about this organizing crusade in the South today as we were 11 years ago when we set out to organize the unorganized workers of the other parts of this country."

He praised Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO organizing committee, and his associates for the splendid job they are doing in the South and pledged that he would do everything in his power to have the affiliated unions contribute to the success of the campaign.

DIRECTOR of Organization Allan S. Haywood urged the importance of contributions from all unions for the Southern organizing drive, which "must be sustained year after year until the South is completely organized."

He called for continued organizing in the North where great gains can be made through the cordinated activity of the staffs of the various CIO organizations.

Haywood hailed the record of the CIO during the past two years in which more than 8,000 elections were won and 613,936 workers voted for the CIO.

SPEAKING on the South, Bittner declared that "we are organizing workers regardless of race, color or creed because they are God's human beings," and that any amount of red-baiting would not stop the CIO from doing this job.

Bittner said:

"In the Federal prison at Atlanta there are more former bankers and business men than former representatives of all of the labor organizations in the U. S. Yet no one who is a real American would charge, because of that fact, business and banking are made up of criminals . . .

"We cannot keep non-union employers, the AFL and others from attacking us. But, as God is our judge, we know what the CIO stands for and it does not stand for those things our enemies charge. We know what we are doing in our Southern campaign and that is to attempt to bring a real American standard of living to all of the people."

Executive Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi of the Textile Workers said that the only people "opposed to the CIO in the South are the reactionary politicians, the mill owners and all the corporate powers that exist in the East and have controlled the lives and destinies of people in the South."

Director of Organization James J. Matles of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers called for the "rekindling of the enthusiam and cooperation that existed between us in 1937 and 1939 during the greatest of the organizing efforts." He declared that the "percentage of victories in Labor Board elections will be even greater than they are today if we can show that we are united and fighting back, and that we ourselves do not indulge in saying anything that will result in the loss of one election by any CIO union."

MARITIME VICTORY

THE Longshoremen and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., both members of the CIO Committee for Maritime Unity, this week ratified agreements giving substantial wage increases and other benefits to members of the unions who had been on strike since Oct. 1.

The ILWU settlement includes a 15c an hour increase, bringing the rate up to $1.52 with overtime pay of $2.28 an hour after six hours.

A federal committee to study the waterfront safety conditions will be appointed. The ILWU repeatedly pointed out during the strike that the injury rate in the longshore industry is the highest in the U. S., according to federal figures.

Under the new agreement, the MEBA receives a 15c increase, bringing chief engineers to $625 a month, an upward adjustment for overtime and night work, and a written guarantee of union security.

Harry Bridges, ILWU president and CMU co-chairman, declared, "The MEBA and the ILWU will return to work with all the rights they had under the old agreements, plus substantial gains."

Meanwhile, the West Coast shipping tieup was prolonged by the AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots, who say they are awaiting the returns of the vote on ratification of their agreement.

To Aid the Hungry: David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Steelworkers, buys a 40,000-calorie, $10 CARE food package from Miss Betty Dickson at the Convention. CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe) guarantees delivery of the food to a needy person.

18c RAISE FOR OIL

WAGE increases of 18c an hour, won without a strike by the CIO Oil Workers Union with the Sinclair Refining Co., pave the way for across-the-board pay gains throughout the entire industry, OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight predicted last week.

The contract, signed in New York just prior to the opening of the CIO parley in Atlantic City, was hailed by Knight as a major gain for the union. The pact covers 9,000 workers in Sinclair refineries, pipe lines and other establishments in several states.

A unique escalator clause provides the workers with automatic cost-of-living increases each three months if the Bureau of Labor Statistics index rises more than 3 points during the quarter year.

Downward adjustments may be made on the same basis, under the terms of the agreement, but in no case can they go below the wage in effect when the contract was signed.

At a press conference in Atlantic City, Knight predicted that similar wage gains would be made with other major corporations in the industry.

He hailed the wisdom of Harry Sinclair, company head, in reaching an amicable agreement with the union.

Similar industrial statesmanship from other employers will avert completely any possibility of strikes of major consequence in the industry, Knight added, and pave the way for full production throughout the coming 12 months.

HAIL PRES. MURRAY AS GREAT LEADER

"PRES. Philip Murray has demonstrated during the course of his leadership of the CIO a stature and an ability which have made him a great leader of American workers and a great public figure," the CIO Convention said in a special resolution.

Noting CIO's achievements under Murray's unifying leadership, the resolution said:

"Through his untiring efforts our organization has achieved its united strength. Through his understanding and skill a small organization has been brought to the point where it now represents the voice and strength of progressive American trade unionism.

"Our organization has become a vital part of American life and is an unshakeable part of its future.

"The contributions of our organization, its advances and its victories have been made under a leadership characterized by determination, initiative, courage, integrity and sound moral character.

"We pledge our continued cooperation to Pres. Murray and our fullest cooperation in the great work of building and strengthening a unified CIO under his inspiring leadership."

Riding a horse borrowed from a traveling rodeo, this Camden, N. J. policeman swings frantically at pickets in front of the plant of the Courier and Post newspapers in a futile effort to clear a path for Courier delivery trucks. Reason for the borrowed horse is that Camden police have none of their own. After repeated police brutality against CIO Newspaper Guild picket lines, the South Jersey CIO Council staged a mass demonstration that brought out 25,000 union members and halted distribution of the paper. NAZI GANG GETS FREE HAND IN U. S.

AMERICAN fascism is going to go unpunished. That became apparent last week as Chief Justice Bolitha J. Laws of U. S. District Court in Washington, D. C., dismissed indictments against 26 of this country's top flight exponents of race hatred and fascism on grounds that they could not get a fair and speedy trial.

Although Laws left a loophole through which the government could appeal dismissal of the mass sedition cases, it was not expected that Atty. Gen. Tom Clark would press the issue before a Dec. 2 deadline.

Freed by the jurist's ruling were Elizabeth Dilling, author of "The Red Network"; Nazi Agent George Sylvester Viereck, Lawrence Dennis, foremost U. S. intellectual fascist; pug-ugly Joe McWilliams, Edward J. Smythe, George E. Deatherage, Charles B. Hudson, Eugene N. Sanctuary, Gerald B. Winrod, Lois de Lafayette Washburn and 17 others.

All had been indicted early in 1944 after two other sets of indictments had been returned against most of them in 1942 and 1943. In an eight-month trial that saw 18,000 pages of testimony offered, they won a mistrial on the death of the presiding judge Nov. 20, 1944.

Justice Laws, in his decision wiping out charges, observed that "as in all long cases, the witnesses are now scattered; some are not accessible, particularly the defendants who are without funds; the memories of witnesses as to events occurring many years ago are not clear."

The court pointed to the statements by O. John Rogge, recently fired special assistant to Atty. Gen. Clark, that the government's case could not stand up in the Supreme Court, and was told also that the Justice Dept. still wanted to keep secret the voluminous report submitted to Clark by Rogge covering his findings in Germany linking some of the defendants directly to the Nazi apparatus.

THE 26 American fascists were an indispensable part of the Nazi network which aimed at conquering the U. S. for Hitler's world empire.

The Nazi connections of the indicted seditionists were laid bare in the suppressed 400-page Rogge report. The trial of their activities led Rogge directly to the core of the Nazi web in the Berlin foreign office and propaganda ministry.

Fanatical in their admiration for Nazism, these hate masters are now free, after two years of wasted court and other legal action, to carry on Hitler's work unmolested.

FROM Rogge's gallery of these fascists can be gleaned evidence of their war activities for which they will now go unpunished. A partial roll call follows:

Viereck was a paid German agent in World War I. He continued his propaganda activities between the wars and from September 1939 until the late summer of 1941 received from the Nazis more than $200,000. The files of the German foreign office describe him as their "confidential liaison agent" in the U. S.

Besides making regular reports to the Nazis, Viereck successfully manipulated members of Congress, steered Nazi propaganda into the Congressional Record, sent out reprints of this material by the hundreds of thousands of copies at the expense of the U. S. taxpayers under congressional franks, set up the Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee, and acquired and operated a publishing house, Flanders Hall.

"Aside from Viereck," Rogge reports, "the defendant in the sedition case who had the most connections with the Nazis was Lawrence Dennis." An avowed Hitler admirer as early as 1933, Dennis visited Germany in 1936 where he conferred with top Nazi leaders.

Back in the U. S., Dennis contacted Nazi agents here and became the foremost intellectual exponent of fascism in this country, writing magazine articles, publishing a newsletter and serving as an editor of the American Mercury.

Indict Editor For Perjury

George M. Stewart of Chicago, one of the wartime editors of Scribner's Commentator, was indicted for criminal perjury on four counts by a federal grand jury in Washington, D. C., last week.

A conviction on a perjury count could result in up to five years imprisonment, a fine of up to $5,000 or both.

Darling of the Nazi Embassy in Washington, Scribner's Commentator presented the German side during the prewar years and obtained its mailing list from Charles A. Lindbergh, Sen. Burton K. Wheeler (D. Mont.), ex-Rep. Hamilton Fish (R. N. Y.), and ex-Sen. Rush D. Holt (D. W. Va.).

HITLER'S LITTLE HELPER

By Federated Press

ONE of the biggest hoaxes ever planted on the U. S. kept press was planned in Adolph Hitler's headquarters and freely handed out to the world by the Hearst press.

Story of how a Hearst correspondent, whose dispatches still reach millions of readers, made himself a tool for Nazi propaganda lies is told by former Asst. Atty. Gen. O. John Rogge in his suppressed 400-page report to the Justice Dept.

The fake came at a time when Hitler's troops were marching on Paris in 1940. To neutralize American opinion the Nazis decided that a phoney interview with Hitler, stating that Paris would not be occupied, that Britain would not be attacked and that Germany had no designs on U. S. territory, should be planted abroad.

Chosen for this task was Karl von Wiegand, who was chief foreign correspondent of the Hearst newspapers and Intl. News Service. Their choice was a natural. Hearst papers had been carrying signed stories by Hitler, Ribbentrop, Goebbels and other Nazis for years. Von Weigand had visited several times with Ribbentrop.

Background of the purported interview with Hitler, dated June 14, 1940, was described to Rogge by Paul K. Schmidt. "The subject for the interview between von Wiegand and Hitler originated with DNB (German news agency) which sent on the questions von Wiegand was to ask," he said. "The questions came to Hitler by way of Otto Dietrich of the Propaganda Ministry.

"Ribbentrop's liaison man, Hewell, heard of the project and sent the questions from Hitler's headquarters to Ribbentrop. As I recall, there were 20 questions. The interview was then processed in the American Committee of the Foreign Office which set up the answers to the questtions.

"Hitler changed the draft of the Foreign Office. He struck out some questions and changed others and the final result was an interview with eight questions and eight answers. Hitler then gave the interview to Dietrich for publication and he also gave it to the Foreign Office for transmittal to Washington."

Von Wiegand took this fake document, dated it "With the German Armies nearing Paris," and throughout the story stated that he was actually interviewing Hitler and dressed it up to appear like a real news item.

The result, Rogge said, was one of the most successful pieces of Nazi propaganda ever directed at this country. The Hearst papers and the Washington Times-Herald, Chicago Tribune and N. Y. Daily News, all part of the McCormick-Patterson press, prominently carried von Wiegand's story.

George Sylvester Viereck, No. 1 Nazi propagandist in the U. S., succeeded in getting Ex-Rep. Jacob Thorkelson to insert the interview in the Congressional Record and had 5,000 copies mailed out under his frank.

Although the von Wiegand episode is the most startling example of how the Germans used the American press, actually the lies and distortions ground out by the Nazi machine turned up in papers here almost every day, thanks to its effective shortwave radio broadcasts and propaganda corps of agents, Congressmen and paid writers.

CIO Demands

THE abandonment by the federal government of its study concerning the practicability of guaranteed annual wages would be a grave injustice to America's millions of workers, the CIO Executive Board declared last week at a meeting following the CIO Convention.

Noting a voluminous interim report on guaranteed annual wages prepared by Murray W. Latimer and submitted to the Advisory Board of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, the CIO stated:

"We strongly oppose the action of the Advisory Board to the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion directing Mr. Latimer to terminate his study by December 31 without adequate time or staff to complete certain vital aspects thereof.

"Although his general conclusions should be released as rapidly as possible, it would be a grave injustice to our members and a frustration of the original goals of the study to prevent continued investigation of specific company and industry experience relating to stabilization possibilities and the cost and value of guaranteed wage plans.

"Our organizations have spent many months promoting this issue and seeking constructive government action thereon. Mr. Latimer's interim report makes a valuable contribution in presenting information and analyzing alternatives. While we may not agree with all his conclusions, his pioneer efforts should be carried forward without hinderance.

"We urge the Advisory Board to reverse its decision of November 12 and permit Mr. Latimer's study to continue as previously planned."

THE Latimer study, not yet officially released, listed 196 known annual wage plans operating in 1946 out of a total of 258 that had been originated, covering 70,000 workers.

Of the 62 discontinued plans, 40% were withdrawn after 1941 and about an equal number were abandoned when unemployment insurance benefits started.

Noting that the plans seemed to have weathered depressions very well, the report pointed out that employers can deduct large sums from their tax bills to aid in guaranteeing yearly wages.

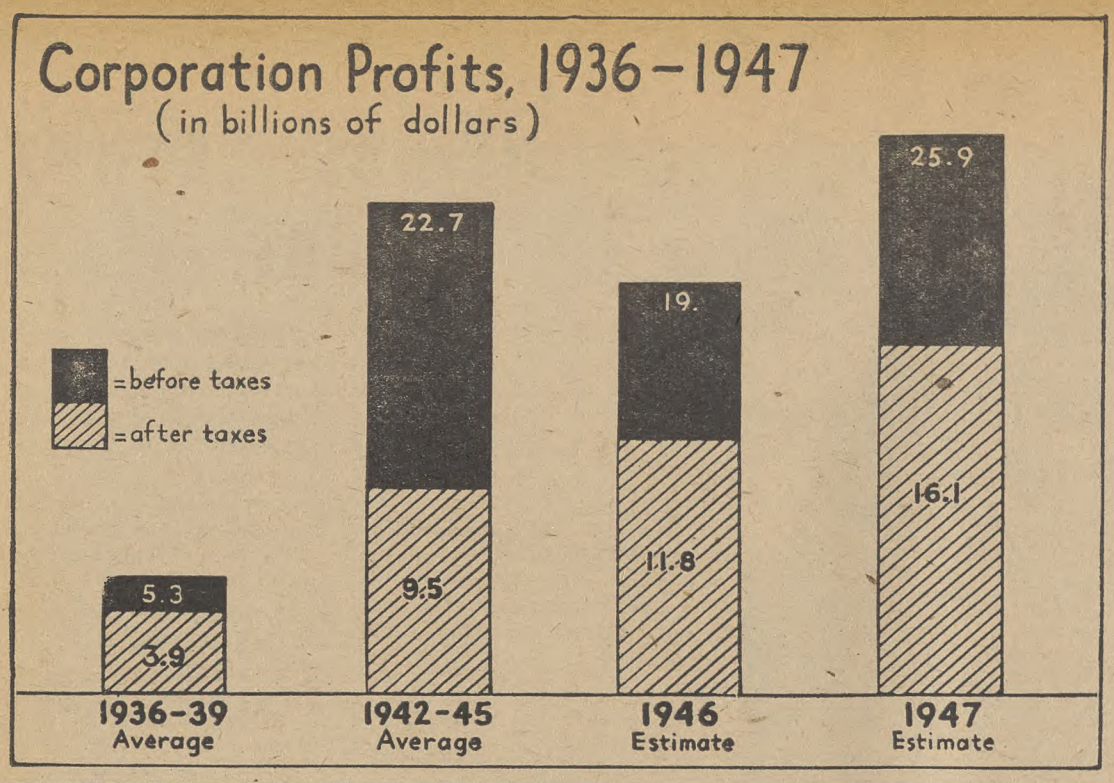
For every dollar paid out currently in guaranteed wages, a company with taxable income of $50,000 or over can have its tax cut by 38c, and under the carry-back, carry-forward provisions of the tax law at present, the government will bear a part of the guarantee cost through tax reduction even if there were no taxable profits in the year in which guaranteed wage payments were made.

THE CIO Convention declared that "the struggle for a guaranteed minimum annual wage at a level sufficient to insure an adequate income is part of the struggle for the preservation of our human resources."

"But," said the Convention, "it is more than that. It is a struggle to bring to our economy a stability which will assure a sound economy. A guaranteed minimum annual wage is a just and sound means of bringing security to workers in industry and at the same time establishing an expanded purchasing power as a foundation for a stable economy."

Speaking on the resolution, David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Steelworkers, said the union will launch a campaign for social security through collective bargaining in its contract negotiations which will start shortly.

"The United Steelworkers will present an overall idea which will comprehend a life insurance plan for the members of our organization, a retirement plan, and also a hospitalization, sickness, dismemberment and disability plan," McDonald said.



DEBUNKING A FABLE

Prices up 50%—See Story, Columns 1 & 2

AN official government report this week exploded the myth that wage increases have "forced" price rises. Reviewing the history of wage-price relations since last winter's drive to maintain take-home pay, the 18th quarterly report of the Office of Price Administration said:

"It appears that in industry after industry the rise of prices—resulting from all causes—by June 1946 exceeded, in some cases very substantially, the increases necessary to offset the wage increases occurring during the same period.

"In only four of the 15 industries for which comparison could be made were price increases less than fully offsetting."

The OPA comparison of increases in average hourly earnings and wholesale prices found 11 of the industries had made "more-than-offsetting price increases." The 11, with pertinent figures, are listed below. The fact that wages are only a small part of the cost of manufacturing resulted in relatively small price increases more than compensating for the rise in workers' income.

FROM MONTH OF WARTIME EARNINGS PEAK TO JUNE 1946

Agricultural implements	21.0	5.1	1.1	9.7
Iron and steel	19.9	7.8	1.6	11:1
Food	8.6	10.2	.9	6.1
Lumber	27.7	10.0	2.8	13.6
Textiles	21.5	12.8	2.8	9.6
Paper and pulp	15.1	13.7	2.1	6.1
Cement	16.4	8.1	1.3	3.2
Furniture	24.9	8.0	2.0	4.5
Brick and tile	33.1	18.7	6.2	9.6
Hides and leather	21.2	10.7	2.3	3.8
Chemicals	9.4	8.8	.8	1.2

Noting record-breaking production and profit records while wages were declining, the OPA report stated flatly:

"The American people wondered if history was about to repeat itself and this war, too, was to be followed by 'boom and bust.'

"The facts on the critically important relationship of wages and prices make it clear that there was good ground for this concern. With many prices already outstripping the rise of wages, further price increases would have to be limited both in degree and in scope if serious trouble was to be avoided and markets were to be assured for the output of the economy under operation at full employment."

You Read Your Paper and Take Your Choice

Another note of the theme song of big business was sounded this week by the news letter of the Natl. City Bank of N.Y. The house organ of this vast enterprise called for more production.

"This," said the h.o., "requires two things—(1) a careful examination by the government of remaining price controls (what controls?—Ed.) with a view to modifying or removing any that are acting as a brake upon output; and (2) avoidance of repetition of the disastrous industrial disputes which have held back production and accentuated scarcities in so many lines over the past year."

BUT, this week, the U.S. Federal Reserve Board reported that inventories are piling up higher and higher as the result of steadily rising production. Output increased 2% in October, bringing it to a point 82% higher than the average for the 1935-39 period!

1.7% Rise in Month

PRICES UP 50% OVER 1939!

YOUR 1939 dollar is worth just 67c today. And its value is rapidly dropping.

The latest report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that retail prices of living essentials used by moderate-income city families advanced 1.7% between mid-September and mid-October, to help skyrocket prices 50% higher than they were on August 15, 1939.

"The family food bill had risen 92.5%, clothing and housefurnishings costs each advanced more than 66% during the same period. Residential rents, however, had increased only 4.3%," the BLS reported.

"Retail food prices in large cities advanced 3.4% between mid-September and mid-October as prices of eggs, dairy products, and sugar and sweets increased sharply.

"Butter prices rose almost 13c per pound during the month; in mid-October butter was 96c per pound as compared with 35c in October 1939 and 61c in June 1946. Poultry and egg prices—each in demand as meat substitutes in September and early October—increased 17 and 11% respectively. The cost of sugar to consumers jumped 20% as retailers were allowed to raise their prices to cover increases in prices given to sugar producers.

"Food prices in mid-October were 29.2% higher than a year ago, and 23.6% above mid-June. They were obtained in the period October 14-17; meat price controls were removed effective October 15.

"Average costs of clothing again advanced and were 0.7% higher in mid-October than in mid-September. The sharp increases in the prices of raw cotton during the summer were reflected in October in higher prices for many essential cotton garments including underwear, shirts, socks, and denim work clothing.

'The Landlords Aren't Fooling'

At least 3,000 housing units in Dallas, Tex., are being withheld from renters by landlords seeking to force the termination of federal rent controls, the Associated Press reported this week.

Mrs. Frank Morris, 55-year-old Dallas clubwoman and president of the state-wide Landlords Inc., was quoted as saying:

"This is a quiet strike. Mostly, there have been 'no' evictions. When tenants move out, doors are locked and stay that way. At least 3,000 Dallas housing units now are being withheld. The landlords aren't fooling."

FOR RENT CONTROL

Congressmen from N. Y. City were urged today by the CIO Office & Professional Workers to take "leadership in the fight to keep Rent Controls intact, to prevent any increase in present rentals, and to keep ceilings on any new housing available."

Pointing out that the 15% rental increase requested by landlords would cost the union's 20,000 white-collar workers in N. Y. City approximately $1,800,000 next year, the letter stated that "they and thousands of unorganized white-collar workers are unable to meet increased living costs at their present salaries."

Rent rises would force them to decrease their already reduced standard of living, the union declared.

CONDEMN MINE INJUNCTION

Issuance of an injunction against the United Mine Workers was unanimously condemned this week by District Council 6 of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. Speaking for 60,000 members in the Pittsburgh area, the Council said:

"Issuance of an injunction against the United Mine Workers of America is a direct violation of the Federal Norris-LaGuardia Act which outlaws injunctions in labor disputes."

YOUR PAYCHECK AND THE CIO

YOUR paycheck and what it will buy was the most important issue before the CIO Convention. Nearly all the other big issues dealt with relate to it.

The fact is that wages have been sharply cut since the end of the war—despite wage increases.

The weekly take-home pay of the average worker is much lower, though his hourly rates may be higher, because of less overtime, shorter hours, etc.

What this take-home pay will buy has been even more deeply cut by terrific increases in living costs.

So the CIO convention had to decide what to do about a general lowering of American labor's living standards.

★ ★ ★

In April 1945, the average weekly earnings of steelworkers were $56.32. By August 1946, they had been reduced to $49.73, despite the 18½c increase in hourly rates.

But when present weekly earnings are considered in terms of what they will actually buy at present higher prices, even the most conservative government figures show they are worth only $43.28.

In other words, the average steelworker has had his real wages cut by $13.04 a week since the end of the war. And other industrial workers have suffered similarly.

★ ★ ★

What has been taken from the workers has been added to the income of corporations in enormously increased profits.

Corporate profits, after taxes, totaled about $5 billion in 1939. In 1943, the peak year of war profits, they rose to $10 billion. And estimates for the last quarter of 1946 show that corporate profits, after taxes, are now rolling in at the annual rate of $15 billion.

★ ★ ★

THE MAIN job confronting the CIO, therefore, is to restore the workers' wages and to give them a fairer share of the enormous rewards of industry.

This need have no inflationary effects, since higher wages can easily be paid out of swollen profits, without increasing prices.

★ ★ ★

IN PROMOTING the big wage movements planned by its convention, the CIO has also to prepare for the resistance which may be expected from the profiteers.

As CIO Counsel Pressman pointed out, the corporations are today relying not so much on the thug and the strikebreaker as on getting anti-union laws from state and federal legislatures.

Then, when a struggle develops between union and employer, he said, "Management can sit back and say, 'Let the struggle be between government and the labor unions: Let the struggle be between the courts, by way of injunctions, and the labor unions.' "

THUS, the matter of your paycheck brings the CIO directly into legislative and political action, to cope with anti-labor bills in Congress and state legislatures.

The most important business before the CIO convention, therefore, stemming from the wage movement, was so to strengthen the unions and activize them in all necessary fields as to make this movement successful.

For this purpose, the convention maintained the CIO's unity in face of factional differences. It resolved to intensify its organizing work, in the South and elsewhere. It planned a concerted move to raise wages, and it placed the greatest stress on increased legislative and political activity.

BY LEN DE CAUX

ONE OF the least reported incidents of the CIO convention was the trouncing given by President Murray to the big newspaper publishers.

This is due not so much to any reluctance on the part of the reporters as to the disinclination of most publishers to print exposures of their own bias.

Murray's dander was raised by editorial attacks on CIO's wage demands. He cited many examples of press hostility to labor and favoritism to profiteers and monopolists.

Most of the country's news organs, he said, "like to criticize the CIO; they enjoy it. Perhaps there is not much that we can do about it.

"It is extremely difficult for a labor organization to change the point of view of a newspaper chain that is owned by a great monopoly.

"It should be borne in mind, however, that they do not reflect public opinion.

"They merely reflect the opinion of people that own considerable property and have a great deal of wealth, that may be living in the lap of luxury, and that may not have too much interest in either the well-being of the individual or the well-being of the country."

They had been hoping the CIO would be terrified into impotence by the threat of Republican anti-labor legislation; that it would do little about restoring deeply-cut real wages; that it would ditch the PAC; and that it would split asunder over factional and ideological differences.

Not that the publishers expressed their hopes for the weakening and destruction of the CIO in those terms. They claimed to be offering good advice on how the CIO might "rehabilitate itself in public esteem".

Like Mr. Dooley's open-shoppers, they said they were "for unions iv properly conducted".

Mr. Dooley's comment is still worth quoting. "Sure", he said, "iv properly conducted. An' there we are: An' how would they have thim conducted? No strikes, no rules, no contracts, no scales, hardly iny wages, an' dam few mimbers."

★ ★ ★

THE CIO, it must be admitted, has never really tried to satisfy its enemies, whether they be anti-union industrialists or anti-union publishers.

It knows that nothing would completely satisfy them short of the CIO digging its own grave, lying down in it and scraping the earth on top of itself.

So CIO members are accustomed to the expressions of pained surprise and condemnation in the big-business press, each time they fail to follow the advice it so freely proffers.

IN CASE any publishers or their readers are really puzzled at CIO's insistence on going its own way, a word of explanation is in order.

The CIO happens to be made up of millions of American working people who get much less than their fair share of good food, decent clothing and housing, and opportunity in life for themselves and their children—and still less of the extra comforts and luxuries which our rich country could make available to all.

These millions expect their representatives to fight constantly and unitedly for the betterment of their conditions, and not to fall for the trickery and divisive propaganda of profiteers and exploiters.

BECAUSE CIO delegates are close to their rank-and-file, they usually manage to present a surprisingly united front on behalf of the workers' basic interests, no matter how they may squabble among themselves over more extraneous matters.

Meeting on the eve of big wage movements and confronting the threat of a new and more hostile Congress, the CIO Convention did not yield to the defeatism and division advocated by the millionaire publishers.

On the contrary, under Murray's seasoned leadership, the delegates preserved and strengthened the unity of the CIO, planned bigger and better organizing and political campaigns, and refused to be diverted from the main business of defending labor's rights and advancing its wages, living standards and liberties.

MAKE ANTI-RACISM A CRIME, CIO URGES

A DEMAND that Congress legislate to make anti-Semitism and anti-racial acts and incitements a crime was voiced by a resolution unanimously adopted by the CIO Convention.

The resolution also:

● Asked the U. S. "to open its doors to the thousands of homeless and desperate Jews in Europe," thus furnishing "to the entire world an inspiring example of a concrete program for the relief of a Jewish people."

● Urged the government to bring pressure on Great Britain to secure immediate admission of 100,000 Jews to Palestine and to provide for free and unlimited immigration to, and land purchase in, Palestine.

● Recommended that the government "take every possible step to bring about the establishment in Palestine of an independent commonwealth as a Jewish National Home with Full guarantees of the legitimate interests of other national groups and equality of rights and opportunities to all its inhabitants."

The resolution noted that "during the war years more than six million unarmed and defenseless Jews, more than a third of world Jewry, were slaughtered by mass murder devices which have been the subject of horrible revelation in trial after trial since the end of the war."

"More than a year after the end of the war in Europe the surviving Jews in Europe are still held in heartrending bondage, living the life of an uprooted people, without home, without means, and almost without hope," the resolution continued. "They yearn to return to a life of human dignity and self-respect."

SPEAKING on the resolution, Vice-Pres. Van A. Bittner of the CIO Steelworkers said:

"Just imagine if you can, six million—not six million Jews so much—six million of God's human beings crucified as these men, women and children were crucified" under Hitler's purge.

Pointing to the material aid that our nation can offer the survivors irrespective of what Great Britain does, Bittner declared:

"I say again the government of the U. S. should recognize its responsibilities here at home and not quibble any longer on giving these depressed people a haven of refuge here in this, the greatest country of the world."

Delegates Abraham Miller of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and Irving Abramson of the Retail & Wholesale Workers also supported the resolution.

Miller said that the million and a half homeless Jews in Europe do not want to go back where they came from "because they will only find the cemeteries where their loved ones are buried, victims of Fascism and Naziism."

Abramson urged the Convention to implement the resolution strongly be urging the British government to give to 100,000 displaced people the opportunity to go to Palestine immediately where they might have a chance to enjoy a homeland and the dignity and influence they have a right to look for as human beings.

Books, pamphlets, magazine articles, films and film-strips grouped under general subject headings, are described briefly.

WFTU WINS BROADER UNITED NATIONS ROLE

EFFORTS of the World Federation of Trade Unions to win full status in the United Nations Economic & Social Council met last week with partial success.

The WFTU jumped a preliminary hurdle when the Economic & Humanitarian Committee of the UN General Assembly voted 22-15 to give the world labor organization the right to submit questions for the Council agenda. The General Assembly itself must finally give approval to the proposal before the measure is written into the UN books.

A second, more sweeping proposal, which would have given the World Federation the same rights to make oral or written statements to the Economic & Social Council, was defeated, however, by a 24-14 vote. The vote found Great Britain and the U. S. in disapproval, with France and the Soviet Union urging its acceptance. Among the delegations which voted with France and the Soviet Union were Yugoslavia, Poland, Norway and Chile.

Opposition to the proposal was based on a charge of "special privilege" which would be accorded to the labor unions of the world if they obtained an effective voice in the Council. Leaders of the CIO and of the British Trades Union Congress had expressed hearty support of the WFTU proposal and had been endeavoring to change the attitude of their government delegations.

The WFTU argument took the form that, as the representative of some 70,000,000 union workers in about 60 countries, the labor organization had gained a special status in world affairs and as a force for international peace which justified its effective participation in UN work.

The Council earlier had rejected the WFTU proposal, but it was once again brought to the floor by a motion of Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov.

CIO's backing of the WFTU move was contained in a resolution passed at the Atlantic City convention, in which the delegates pledged their "complete support" to the fight for adequate representation in UN activities.

"During the period of the functioning of the World Federation of Trade Unions it has made clear to the whole world that the workers of the world, the common people of the world, want peace and security," the resolution said.

"It has demonstrated that it is possible for the representatives of the labor movements of the countries of the world to work together harmoniously and to reach effective solutions of the problems which vex the world."

WORLD LABOR

THE CIO will be officially represented at the inauguration of Miguel Aleman as President of Mexico on Dec. 1.

Upon invitation of the Mexican Federation of Labor (CTM) a three-man delegation headed last week for the Mexican capital. Representing CIO are Jacob Potofsky, Clothing Workers president and head of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, and Sec.-Treas. David McDonald of the United Steelworkers.

Following the inauguration, Knight will proceed to San Jose, Costa Rica, to attend as a fraternal delegate the executive committee meeting of the Latin-American Federation of Labor (CTAL).

ANNOUNCEMENT OF the granting of two British medals to two CIO officials in appreciation of American labor's contribution to the Allied cause during the war, was made at a CIO Executive Board meeting following last week's convention.

Pres. Philip Murray was given the Commander of the British Empire Medal, while Chairman Irving Abramson of the Community Services Committee received the King's Medal.

In speaking to the executive board, Murray emphasized that he received the medal as a token of esteem for the work of all American labor organizations in assisting Great Britain during the desperate days of the war.

Abramson revealed that $1,315,321 of the funds collected by the War Relief Committee had been spent for special labor projects in the British Isles, while $332,500 had been spent in Palestine and $364,500 in India on similar projects.

"HEARTIEST gratitude" for CIO relief contributions to hard-pressed Austrian workers was expressed in a recent letter from Chancellor Leopold Figl of Austria to Anthony Luchek, European representative of the CIO Community Services Committee.

"I fully agree with your plan to have the food distributed by the Austrian Trade Union Federation and am convinced that the federation will be objective in the selection of the recipients and will carry out the distribution according to the standard of need," Figl wrote.

"May I ask you to accept my heartiest gratitude and convey this feeling to all your associates and particularly the CIO," Figl concluded.

A UNION advisory committee on international affairs has been named by the Dept. of Labor to serve as advisors to Sec. Lewis Schwellenbach and Asst. Sec. David A. Morse, the Department's new executive in charge of foreign problems.

Representing CIO on the committee are Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Vice-Pres. Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer of the clothing workers; Clinton Golden of the Steelworkers, and Michael Ross of the Intl. Affairs Dept.

Also on the committee are four spokesmen from the AFL, one representing the Brotherhoods of Railroad Trainmen and Locomotive Engineers and one from the Railway Labor Executive Assn.

"This committee will be very valuable to the Dept. of Labor in the performance of its important and complex responsibilities," Schwellenbach declared. "The cooperation of the major labor organizations through this committee will increase greatly the effectiveness of the Department in its international work."

First meeting of the new group is scheduled for Dec. 12.

A FREE ECONOMY?

GROWTH of trade-restricting arrangements, or cartels, among large firms operating in international commerce reached a point just before the war where in the U. S. approximately 87% of the mineral products including oil, 60% of the agricultural products, and 42% of the manufactured products came under some measure of cartel control.

These tentative estimates are included in a new research survey, "Cartels in Action," being issued this week by the Twentieth Century Fund.

The survey gives a detailed examination of cartel operations in eight major fields: sugar, rubber, nitrogen, steel, aluminum, magnesium, electric lamps and chemicals, including dyestuffs and explosives.

The survey defines a "cartel" in international trade as "an arrangement among, or on behalf of, producers engaged in the same line of business designed to limit or eliminate competition among them. . . . They range from loosely defined gentlemen's agreements or informal understandings among business rivals, to formal compacts providing administrative machinery for regulating output, sharing markets, and fixing prices."

"However much cartels may differ in their structure or legal status," says the report, "they have one element in common. They seek to free producers from the influence of market forces and to subject the market to deliberate, concerted control, by and for producers. They represent a type of economic planning—planning primarily for the protection and promotion of producer interests."

SANTA'S WORKSHOPS ARE CIO

By ALICE SKODZUS

WITH Christmas approaching, millions of small fry and their fathers—are eagerly eyeing the store displays of toys and games, produced this year in record quantity. For Santa's workshops throughout the United States have mushroomed into a big industry, with estimated total sales for 1946 set at $250,000,000.

Contrary to fable, this vast output is not produced by gnomes in a North Pole workshop, creating toys for Santa's good little girls and boys. In hundreds of factories, thousand of men and women of all ages earn their daily bread in the production of playthings.

Until a decade ago, the lives of toy workers stood in sharp contrast to the gay and ingenious decorations which they supplied to grace Christmas trees in homes more fortunate than their own. In 1933 the NRA set a precedent-making minimum wage of $12 a week for the doll workers in New York City.

In an industry which has always been seasonal, such wages could not maintain a minimum standard of decency for workers and their families. Christmas for a toy worker emphasized the bitterness of his lot by the absence of his products from his own home.

Sporadic attempts at unionzation of the toy industry had been made in New York City since as early as 1910. Immigrant workers, putting in 14 hours a day in firetrap factories and getting $5 a week and tuberculosis for their efforts, were anxious to unite to better their lot.

But strikes found no encouragement in the practices of the police. Pickets were invariably arrested, while hired thugs were just as invariably winked at by the authorities. Black-listing of leaders, divide-and-rule tactics, and the financial ability of the employers to hold out longer than their employes combined to dissolve the little union every time it sprang up.

THERE was little change in conditions for the next 20 years, except that the industry grew impressively and displaced imports of toys from Europe. Wages, however, remained at a very low level.

The early 'thirties saw the reawakening of militancy on the part of the workers. The depression emphasized the common need for an organization which would provide some kind of security. The answer was, of course, a union.

Once more the nucleus was built, and an intensive organization plan mapped and followed. In August, 1933, a strike began, with both sides prepared to fight to the finish. This time, the union refused to give in, despite violence and coercion of every form. They had staked their futures on this chance. After six weeks of bitter struggle, the Doll and Toy Workers Local was recognized.

One of the gains negotiated at this time was the 36-hour week. When it was put into effiect, however, the employers found that with their increased labor costs they could not meet the competition of unorganized manufacturers. The union faced a choice of a 36-hour week, but no work, or the dropping of the clause from the contract.

Naturally, they chose the latter, but with the resolution to organize the rest of the industry as soon as possible, to eliminate substandard competition. This was the impetus for the organizational drive which came later and grew into the present-day CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers Intl. Union. Anthony Esposito, long active in the union, became its first president and has served it without interruption ever since.

IN 1937, when the CIO was formed, the doll and toy workers, realizing that the greatest gains were to be won when all industrial workers organized together, left the AFL to join the CIO. An organizing committee was sponsored and an organization drive of broad scope was begun.

Convening in New York in 1938, the committee counted close to 5,000 members. Today 50,000 members are represented in collective bargaining by PJNW-CIO. Some open shops remain to be won, but their number dwindles steadily as the organizing branch of the union continues to pile up victories.

PJNW contracts now can be found from upper New England down to West Virginia and west to Chicago. A drive on the west coast is now being planned. The largest doll plant in the world, the Ideal Toy and Novelty Company of Long Island, has a contract with the union. Lionel Corp., famous maker of toy trains, also bargains with PJNW.

That is the story of how Santa Claus came to bargain with a CIO union. It has made a democratic fellow of him, for on his yearly rounds he no longer by-passes the chimneys of his own workers. And they, protected by the union which they've built, can really put hearts into the greeting, "Merry Christmas! Fraternally yours, Joe Worker."

Destined to gladden many young hearts on Christmas morning, these dolls are being dressed by French war-bride Andree Barresi at the Ideal doll plant. Andree and her ex-GI husband are both PJNW-CIO members. In the U. S. only seven months, Andree is thrilled by America, amazed at union's achievements.

CIO PUBLICITY WORK HAILED

"EXTREME hostility and prejudice against the CIO" has been the attitude of a large section of the daily press of the nation throughout the past year—both during the wage fights of last winter and the recently concluded political campaign—the CIO Convention at Atlantic City heard from its Press & Publicity Committee.

Sound public relations by CIO unions have helped overcome this barrage from hostile publishers, the committee said—in great measure due to the "good judgment of Pres. Murray" who has constantly recognized the need for a "sound and consistent public relations policy."

The committee was headed by Len De Caux, CIO Publicity Director, and consisted of 27 other publicity and public relations directors of affiliated unions.

Radio channels, on the other hand, have been kept open to labor unions despite occasional setbacks at various times during the year.

On the favorable side of the radio ledger, the committee noted that CIO broadcasts on CBS, ABC and NBC "have brought labor's message directly into the homes of America and their excellent ratings by authoritative radio surveys prove their effectiveness."

BUT the picture of labor and radio was by no means one of consistent brightness.

"In recent months a trend back to some of radio's more pronounced anti-labor activities has been apparent," the committee warned.

"Some of the progressive commentators have been dropped. Both Upton Close and Henry J. Taylor are once again broadcasting to the American people, the former under the sponsorship of many of America's leading anti-labor and anti-democratic elements.

"These commentators, together with Fulton Lewis, Jr., form the spearhead of the phalanx of anti-labor commentators which must be fought by American workers."

Black marks on radio's public service record, as noted by the committee, included the refusal of WMT in Iowa to broadcast a series of political announcements by CIO unions; the invocation of a ruling by the Brush-Moore chain in Ohio that it would handle no PAC announcements on the basis that it is not a political party; and the refusal of the Don Lee chain in California to sell time to CIO-PAC for a political speech by Pres. Murray, as well as the refusal of KGO, San Francisco, to broadcast speeches by the CIO head and by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey on a series of cannery workers' elections in that state.

IT recommended that CIO affiliates intensify their efforts to keep the unions' membership aware of the issues, and to mobilize protests against discrimination against labor's use of the air towards both local and national radio stations and chains. The NAM, it was pointed out, boasts that it receives a million dollars' worth of free time each year from local stations.

The report hailed the activities of the Federal Communications Commission in fighting over-commercialization of radio programs, and warned of reactionary effort to limit the FCC's functions.

One section of the report was devoted to FM (frequency modulation) radio developments, which certain big interests are seeking to sabotage. The committee criticized the allotment of large numbers of FM broadcasting licenses to newspaper owners, on the basis that this action has spurred the growth of monopoly control of public opinion channels. Labor was urged to start FM stations.

THE effective manner in which CIO and its affiliated organizations combatted the hostile press of the country was the subject of praise from the committee.

The CIO press, it said, "has done a thorough and competent job of reaching the members of our unions. General publicity work, through radio, news releases, leaflets and contacts with civic organizations, has also been at a high level, notably during the strikes early this year."

The committee lauded the "excellent job" done by PAC in making material available to unions and the general public, and commended the public information job now being done in connection with the southern organizing drive. The committee expressed praise for "Director Bittner's judgment in realizing the importance that public relations were bound to play in the drive."

Curtailment of trade union papers, as well as of fraternal, religious, civic and small weekly community publications is a definite possibility, the committee warned, as the result of government lifting of price and inventory controls of newsprint.

Noting that an estimated 3,000 newspapers have been forced to shut down in recent years, the committee warned that action must be taken promptly to prevent the big metropolitan papers gobbling up a lion's share of the present newsprint supply. These big publications, the reports said, have been increasing the size of their editions ever since war's end.

It called upon the CIO publicity and legal departments to meet with government officials, urged an investigation of possible cooperative purchasing of newsprint, and urged editors of labor papers to work closely with their opposite numbers on fraternal, language, religious and neighborhood papers to "remove what is virtually a threat to freedom of the press" in the form of reduced newsprint supplies.

AMVETS FAVOR CURBS IN HOME PRICES, RENTS

THE AMVETS at their second annual convention at St. Louis last weekend took some forward steps without placing themselves in the vanguard in the fight for social progress.

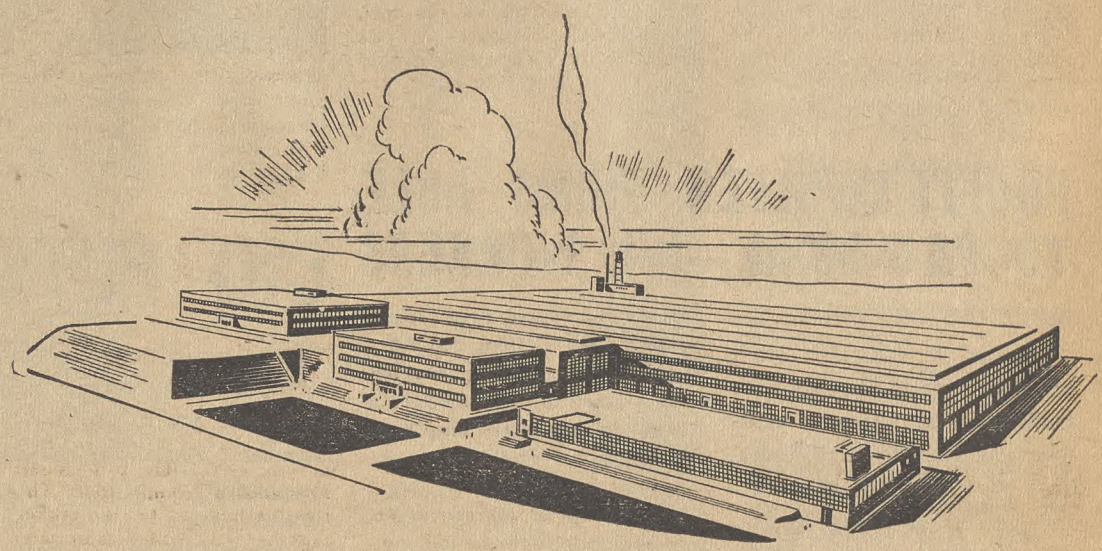
The convention elected as commander, Ray Sawyer, attorney for the Federal Communications Commission, generally regarded as taking a middle of the road position, to succeed anti-labor Jack Hardy.

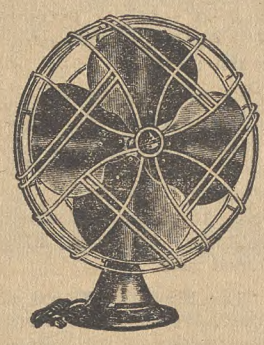
Sawyer was elected after the convention knew and approved his views on housing. He was chairman of a committee which called for continuance of rent and price ceilings.

The convention, however, failed to approve the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill, but gave its support to one section of the measure designed to encourage rental housing by guaranteeing a reasonable return on the investment.

The convention went on record as opposing merger with the progressive American Veterans Committee "now and forever."

To Better Serve the Needs of a Growing America





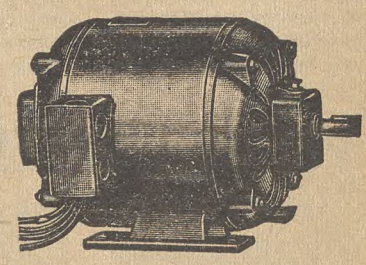
The three M's, Men, Machinery and Materials, are the basic requirements of a manufacturing business. If they are wisely coordinated in producing needed merchandise, the business will grow and prosper.

Here, then, is an example of such an organization. Starting, in the year 1890, with a few men, in a small shop, The Emerson Electric Mfg. Co. has enjoyed an ever increasing public confidence in its products.

Since that early day, expansion has averaged better than an acre of floor space every three years. At present, this new plant occupies 775,000 square feet of floor space.

But, more important is the steady increase in the number of people who have received employment through this growth, now numbering in the thousands.

The individuals who today plan, supervise, produce, distribute and service Emerson-Electric products are holding to the same high tradition of quality and value, as their predecessors.



When you purchase a product bearing the Emerson-Electric nameplate, you can be certain it is the best that skilled craftsmen, using modern equipment and materials can produce. It is also our pledge for the future, our contribution to a bigger and finer America.

'LIBERAL' PUBLISHER DEFIES GUILD, CIO

THE would-be liberal publisher, J. David Stern, this week continued his defiance of the Newspaper Guild, which has struck his Philadelphia Record and his Camden, N. J., Courier and Post, and the South Jersey IUC which last week-end staged a mass demonstration that halted the distribution of the Courier.

Shaken by the demonstration of 25,000 CIO members, Stern heeded the request of Mayor Brunner of Camden and met with the Guild negotiators in City Hall, but walked out of the meeting after Guild negotiators refused his demand that all union gains registered in the last 13 years be scrapped and bargaining begin from scratch.

The demonstration with members of the Shipbuilding Workers, the Food and Tobacco, and the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers participating won an agreement from city officials that there would be no further attempt by the police to limit the number of pickets.

The demonstration was the climax of several days of police brutality in the arrest of 40 persons, including six girl strikers, who had been handing out strike literature.

The day before the demonstration cops charged 1,500 pickets, but failed to intimidate them. When the police began to unpack machine guns in the basement of City Hall, Pres. John Fabian of the South Jersey IUC ordered a 48-hour labor holiday.

The next day, Nov. 22, thousands of pickets began a disciplined march around the plant. Mounted and foot cops repeatedly charged the picket line in a futile attempt to break holes for loaded newspaper trucks.

Thirty-two pickets were arrested and three persons were injured, requiring hospital treatment. Finally, strike breakers on the roof tried to guide the landing of a helicopter on the roof, where bundles of papers awaited, but after the plane made several attempts to land, the effort was abandoned.

Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO Auto Workers takes part in a demonstration at the Allis-Chalmers plant, West Allis, Wis., where Local 248 of his union has been on strike seven months. Thomas has taken personal charge of the strike. Twenty thousand members of Milwaukee CIO unions took part in the demonstration against the firm, which has defied all efforts of the U. S. government, including the President, to get it to engage in genuine collective bargaining.

PROFIT-SWOLLEN FIRMS ABLE TO PAY MORE—OIL WORKERS

THE CIO Oil Workers has opened its campaign for a 25c hourly wage increase with publication of a 16-page pamphlet entitled The Oil Workers' Case for Wage Adjustments.

Based on the theme, graphically portrayed on the blue-colored cover, that wages support the entire structure of American civilization—stores, churches, schools, libraries, hospitals and business—the pamphlet stresses the fact that prosperity is everybody's business.

The oil workers' case for higher wages is based on the fact that when a wage settlement was reached in December, 1945, which sacrificed part of take-home pay, it was understood that price control would stabilize purchasing power.

That understanding among union, employers and government has been wrecked by "a coalition of profit-hungry industrialists and a reactionary clique in Congress," the union asserts. The union's loyal support of price and wage controls is stressed.

Sabotage of OPA resulted in Texas oil workers' families cutting consumption of milk, meat, butter and eggs, according to a survey reproduced in the pamphlet. Less clothing is being bought, savings have shrunk on the average to less than $300 a family, money wages have been declining and real wages have declined by 20%. At the same time profits of oil companies, reviewed at length in the pamphlet, are shown to be an all-time peak.

The union emphasizes its support of full production and full employment at a comfort standard. Attention is drawn to the fact that labor costs in oil refining are the lowest of any major industry. According to the 1939 U. S. Census of Manufactures, labor costs in refining are 5.2% of the value of the manufactured product.

The hoary canard that wage increases must result in price increases of a similar percentage is knocked in the head. With overall labor costs in the oil industry less than 10% of all costs, a 10% wage increase would increase all costs but 1%. The union points out that sharp price increases already gained by the industry will easily absorb the cost of the 25c hourly wage increase sought.

CIO PUTS HEAT ON CHALMERS

In the largest show of strength by Milwaukee labor in recent years, 20,000 CIO members staged a half-day demonstration at the huge Allis-Chalmers plant here Nov. 25 to protest the company's refusal to arbitrate the seven-month strike.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last weekend wired the Milwaukee CIO Council to give unified support to the strike following CIO Executive Board action. The telegram to Administrator Peter Markunas of the Milwaukee Council said:

"The Executive Board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations joins me in urging that all workers affiliated through their respective local unions with the Milwaukee Council lend sincere and unified support to the members of Local 248-UAW on strike at Allis-Chalmers, West Allis, Wis.

"Wages, hours, and working conditions of American workers must be the main consideration of our unions, and they should not be impaired by differences in political points of view.

"It is the considered judgment of the Executive Board that this employer is trying to capitalize on differences of opinion within our ranks, which are none of its concern. We urge all concerned to lay aside political differences and join together as union members in opposing the vicious tactics of the Allis-Chalmers Corp."

Fourteen pickets were arrested and three policemen injured in skirmishes as strike-breakers attempted to pass through the massed lines of the demonstration. One picket was hurt seriously when he was run down by a scab-driven car.

After the demonstration Vice Pres. R. J. Thomas of CIO Auto Workers, who arrived here the same day to take charge of the strike, said UAW locals would continue to support striking UAW Local 248 and the international would stay in the picture until a settlement is reached.

Describing Allis-Chalmers as the worst company he had ever dealt with, Thomas accused the company of collusion with law enforcement agencies. He charged that the arrests were illegal and declared pickets were brutally mauled by police and dragged into company buildings where they were arrested and photographed in the presence of company officials.

Nearly 1,000 police, deputies and private detectives were used to protect scabs as they left the plant. Several clashes resulted when detectives were discovered infiltrating picket lines.

The demonstration started with several thousand CIO workers in the morning and grew to mammoth proportions in the afternoon. One group of UAW workers from the nearby Seaman Body plant was estimated at 1,250 persons. At the UAW local's request some plants with CIO contracts shut down for the afternoon so their workers could participate.

Later in the evening two deputy sheriffs dramatically burst into a press conference Thomas was holding in his hotel room and presented him and four UAW Intl. representatives with cease and desist warrants charging violation of an anti-picketing injunction. Similar warrants were served weeks ago on 22 Local 248 officers and stewards.

The union sent a second appeal to Gov. Walter Goodland (R) Nov. 25 urging him to call upon the company to accept the union's proposal to submit disputed issues to arbitration.

THOMAS WARNS POLICE

Vice Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO Auto Workers said this week that pickets at Allis Chalmers plant could not be restrained much longer if police brutality and open collusion between enforcement officers and the company continues.

Thomas issued this warning after 14 pickets were arrested following a half-day demonstration No. 25 at the plant gates. He said that the UAW would "see to it that persons responsible for wanton attacks on peaceful pickets would be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law."

At a press conference with Thomas was UAW picket Olaf Pieere, 57-year-old union committee man. With 17 years' experience at the plant. Pieere was one of the 14 held on bond riot."

Pierre, who had a black eye, a deep gash on a cheek and a badly swollen jaw, was dragged through the plant gate, taken into a company building and beaten. Three other arrested pickets were mauled and beaten by police and deputies on the company premises, Thomas charged.

PUBLIC WORKERS CALL WAGE PARLEY

PRES. ABRAM FLAXER of the CIO Public Workers this week announced that the union will hold an Emergency Wage Policy meeting of Federal employes Dec. 7 in the Hotel Hamilton, Washington, D. C., to formulate proposals for wage increases and job security for Federal and Postal employes.

In his call for the conference, Flaxer pointed to the inflationary spiral which is slashing the purchasing power of the Federal workers' money. He said that U. S. workers "have been the victims of a 'too little and too late' policy ever since the war began."

"The Little Steel formula went into effect in 1942, granting 15% wage increases to other workers, but government workers received no base pay increase whatever until 1945. While other workers—industrial and white collar—were receiving time and a half pay for overtime work as a result of government policy, the government's own employes were paid only time and a twelfth for overtime work, being granted time and a half only after V-E Day, when overtime was being eliminated.

"Last winter, when the national reconversion wage pattern was established by CIO, industrial workers received wage increases of 18c per hour, Federal workers had to wait six months for any adjustment at all and then, on July 1, received wage increases averaging only 14c an hour."

FURNITURE UNION WINS STRIKE

THE four-month strike against Doak Finch's Thomasville (N. C.) Chair Co., which aroused the support of the community and the entire CIO, has been won.

The settlement, hailed by union leaders as a "glorious victory," was ratified last week-end by 1,284 members of the CIO Furniture Workers who had walked out in protest against $18-a-week wages and anti-union conditions in Finch's eight plants.

Terms of the settlement include a 15% wage increase, a guaranteed 10c hourly minimum increase, one to two weeks' vacations, union recognition and the checkoff.

Back in 1932, before there was a union, the Finch workers walked out and stayed out for six weeks before their strike was broken. This time, with the solid backing of the union, widespread community support and financial support from other CIO affiliates, they won their fight.

MILLIONS OF $'S WON IN DIXIE

These attractive members of the CIO Office & Professional Workers who are on strike against the United Duroc Record Assn., Peoria, Ill., said they not only received salaries as low as $85 a month but had to submit to being kissed by directors of the firm in order to keep their job. Helen Schmidt (l.) said: "No one was missed; we all had to stand for it."

DIRECTOR Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee this week announced that "millions of dollars in annual wage increases have been won by CIO unions in the South "since the drive began, and that ten more victories had been won during the week ending Nov. 19, including one at the largest citrus-canning plant in the world.

"A new contract negotiated with just one company by a local union added more than $2,000,000 to that community's annual payroll," Mr. Bittner said.

"The largest single hourly wage increase ever negotiated in the textile industry in Georgia was won by Textile Workers in August at the Lafayette Cotton Mills. This raise, 15½ per hour, boosted the mill payroll more than $100,000 a year and brought the minimum wage in the plant to 70c an hour.

"Coincident with the beginning of the CIO organizing drive in North Carolina, unorganized cotton mills in that state followed the lead of unionized mills and, generally, raised their minimum wage to 73c an hour.

"In Rome, Ga., pay adjustments negotiated by the TWUA with the managements of the Tubize Rayon Co. and the Anchor Duck Mills in June added more than $1,000,000 to the city's payroll."

The CIO won a lop-sided victory at Pasco Packing Co., Dade City, Fla., which the Miami Herald says is the world's largest citrus-canning plant. The vote was 1,066 for the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers and 156 against.

Bittner said that the huge margin for CIO "shows that Florida citrus employes want and need strong unions. We confidently expect the employes of other plants in the state to follow them rapidly into the CIO."

HAWAIIAN VICTORY BLOW TO FEUDALISM

PRES. HARRY BRIDGES of the CIO Longshoremen last week hailed the end of the Hawaiian sugar strike which lasted 77 days as "the beginning of the end of a feudalism."

The settlement reached in Hawaii gives 28,000 workers in the sugar industry, members of the ILWU, a minimum wage of 71c an hour as against a former wage of 42c an hour, and in some cases as low as 26c.

It also eliminates the old serf-like system of perquisites. The net hourly gain for the workers, with the increase and with the elimination of the perquisites, amounts to 20c an hour.

Under the perquisites system, everything used or needed by the worker was owned by the employer, including land, house, water system, heat and power and other services. They were forced to pay over and over for things that continued to remain the property of the employers.

Highlights of the agreement include irrevocable check-off of union dues, barring favoritism to non-union members, nine holidays a year, a plan whereby an employe can qualify for two weeks' vacation after one year's employment, a guarantee against discrimination because of race, color or creed, and sick leave ranging from six days after one year's employment to 30 days after five years.

The strike, longest and bitterest in the history of the Hawaiian Islands, became an issue in the Nov. 5 elections for Territorial officers. Charges of "Moscow domination" and criticism of strike leaders as "unscrupulous, selfish, ambitious, arrogant and irresponsible" daily filled the columns of the labor-baiting Honolulu Advertiser.

The people took sides. There were few "neutrals." Election returns indicated the sharp division between those who exist on sugar dividends and those who produce the sugar.

Though the Republican Party maintained a majority in both houses of the legislature, 31 out of 56 CIO-PAC endorsed candidates were swept into office. Among the PAC-backed candidates elected to the house of representatives were four ILWU members, three of them union officials.

SOUTH CIO's No. 1 JOB—MURRAY

Organizing the unorganized in the South is the CIO's No. 1 job, Pres. Philip Murray declared last week as he closed the eighth CIO convention at Atlantic City.

Murray said that he wished "to impress all delegates with the positive need of carrying forward our movement and organizational program all over the United States of America, this being particularly true with respect to the Southern drive.

"In the course of the coming months whilst we are engaged in these organizing activities in the South, it may be necessary for the members of your Executive Board, the Vice-Presidents and other officers of the Natl. CIO to call upon you for additional assistance.

"We need help if this work of organizing the South is to go forward. And it must go forward with the united support of every organization affiliated with the CIO."

CIO Convention Reports

ON EDUCATION AND RESEARCH

IN this period of political reaction which the nation is entering, a long-range educational program can do much to make labor's political action so effective that it will reverse the present reactionary trend, the Education Committee reported to the CIO Convention.

"An effective educational program can help us to build the kind of loyalty and understanding which will maintain union strength and spread union influence," stated the report submitted by Chairman Kermit Eby and Sec. George Guernsey.

Educational activities of the Natl. CIO, International Unions, and Councils have been developed in response to the real needs of the unions in facing every day problems of organizing, collective bargaining, and legislative and political action.

"In CIO, education has been no ornamental frill," the Committee said. "It has been an integral part of the union work."

Schools, institutes and steward training classes sponsored by CIO affiliates have trained local union leaders to handle more efficiently such problems as settling grievances, running union meetings, and organizing political action drives, while pamphlets and visual aids have carried the CIO's message to great masses of workers.

TO increase the effectiveness of education work, the Committee recommended:

1. Expansion of the work at National CIO headquarters as far as finances permit, to make all possible use of the CIO's educational resources.

2. Inclusion of more educational directors on the staffs of CIO Councils which are in a position to play a vital role in educational activities.

3. An increase in the number of regional training centers.

4. An added emphasis on the broadest type of shop steward training.

WORKING in close cooperation with the research staffs of the International unions, the CIO Research Dept. has aided unions in collective bargaining, legislative and political activities and in serious economic problems facing unions, states the Research Committee report submitted by Chairman Kermit Eby and Sec. Katherine Ellickson.

Information for wage campaigns prepared to assist CIO members in their efforts to raise their living standards included material on the 65c minimum pay bill, price control, expanded social security and full employment. An analysis of CIO financial practices and democratic procedures issued by the department received widespread favorable publicity.

Charging that a deliberate campaign of misinformation has been undertaken by monopoly interests seeking to conceal their responsibility for higher prices and depressed wages, the report stated that these interests "hypocritically blame labor for high prices and shortage of housing and other necessities. To support this hoax, they suppress the facts which would reveal the real situation."

As examples of this policy, the report cited the general refusal of industry to cooperate in the study of the guaranteed annual wage initiated by Pres. Roosevelt, and the influence exerted to prevent continuation of the Census of Manufactures which would have provided basic information vitally needed in this crucial period of economic readjustment.

TO enable the CIO to present the true facts in the face of misrepresentation and suppression of information, the Committee recommended these proposals:

1. Periodic analyses of the general economic situation to aid CIO unions in collective bargaining.

2. An expanded program on a continued and systematic basis of special studies of prices, productivity, profits, etc., such as the study made by the CIO Wage Research Committee, composed of research representatives of the Natl. CIO and six Internationals.

3. Work of the CIO research staffs should be geared to servicing labor's legislative and political program.

4. Government agencies must be urged to provide essential and accurate information on economic problems of importance to labor, and to require that corporations supply facts and figures needed to show what is happening to employment, earnings, profits, production and related subjects.

PAMPHLET TELLS UNIONS HOW TO GET PUBLIC EYE

"What people know about us is the union's business. What happens in our town is union business, too. That's why community participation and telling our town about unions should be on the union's agenda."

This is the beginning of a very useful 84-page illustrated pamphlet, "Union-Community Handbook," written by Virginia Hart and published by the University of Wisconsin School for Workers, 1214 W. Johnson St., Madison 5, Wis. Price 25c.

The handbook is full of practical suggestions on how unions can work through such community services as schools, libraries, and social agencies, and how they can develop closer cooperation with organizations representing consumers, veterans, farmers, minorities and churches.

Particularly good is the section on public relations which tells how to get the right kind of publicity in newspapers and on the radio, and how and when to use commercial ads, calendars, posters, window displays, fair booths, parades and other means of getting the public eye.

Radios For Veterans

Thirty-six soldiers and merchant seamen in veterans' hospitals in the Bronx and on Ellis Island were happy this week over the gift of individual radios, presented by the CIO Natl. Maritime Union in cooperation with the Military Order of the Purple Heart. NMU contributed $1,000 for the purchase of the radios.

CHAMPIONS DRIVE REOS

Win First Place in Both Events at National ATA Truck Roadeo

The winning drivers show equal pride in the sturdy, smooth-handling Reos. Adamski has driven more than 200,000 miles in Chicago's crowded streets without an accident. Zimmerman has a 13-year, accident-free record of more than 1,000,000 miles of highway travel.

ALEX ADAMSKI
1st in straight truck class

CHARLES ZIMMERMAN
1st in tractor-trailer class

IN THE toughest competition with the nation's leading trucks and best drivers, Reo won a sweeping victory. Twenty-three entries, two events—and Reo took first in both! Proof again that Reo trucks and tractors are unequaled in maneuverability and response to the wheel! Reo's exclusive More-Load design, with its shorter turning radius and greater handling ease, is the answer. Its value was demonstrated when split-second timing and swift, accurate turns on a difficult course were at a premium. These and other outstanding features—better vision, unfailing power, greater economy, balanced construction, and greater driver comfort make Reo a real "Champion" in the field of commercial transportation. Flicker Front:

NEEDED: MORE FILMS ABOUT REAL MR. AND MRS. AMERICA

By GEORGE WEISSMAN

THE effectiveness of films as educational devices was best demonstrated during the war when millions of our soldiers learned in thirty days what formerly took a year to teach by old methods. And, through an effective film program, the armed forces were able to translate vague conceptions of democracy into concrete terms of actions for those same soldiers.

Those same techniques can and must be used today by the trade union movement and the progressive coalition to combat the NAM-GOP anti-labor drive. More pictures like the UAW's "Brotherhood of Man" and the UE's "Deadline for Action" must be made and shown to large audiences throughout the land.

Labor should make greater use of the 16 mm film, to combat outfits like the N. Y. Daily News which are nursing the American public on the pap of big business. The News recently released to educational and church groups an expensive 16 mm color production, titled "Seventeen Days," which is directed against the newspaper deliverymen's recent strike. The picture presents a sympathetic view of the employers' side of the strike and juggles facts and figures in an attempt t show loyal "public" support for the big publishers.

Other large outfits, using pix to carry public support and buying power, are Ford, Reynolds Metal, American Locomotive, Kellogg's, Pan-American Airways, Elgin Watch and the Institute of Life Insurance. That these films should be reaching into schools, churches, community organizations and the like without any antidote from labor should be of concern to all.

CERTAINLY, labor cannot look to Hollywood as the source of pictures other than of "entertainment" value. The current flood of mysteries, phony psychologic thrillers, leg shows and comedies help kill an evening, but they don't tell the story of Mr. and Mrs. America who work for a living.

More pictures like "Children on Trial" are needed to show up the seamier aspects of life in America and at the same time point a way to correction. This flicker, made by the British Home Office, is the fictionalized story of how the horrible slum conditions of Liverpool force 14-year-old Fred Watson and Shirley Reynolds, 15, into juvenile delinquency.

Terms in progressive reform schools where they are taught useful trades and are removed from the corrupting influences of crowded tenement life make useful citizens of both. The picture, which applies equally well to the slums of Chicago, Detroit, New York or Liverpool, carries the unmistakable implication that unless housing and other living standards are improved, juvenile delinquency will continue to plague our society.

IF YOU are one of those back-seat detectives who likes to whisper the solution to screen mysteries to his neighbor, see "The Dark Mirror," Olivia De Haviland's latest triumph. You will find yourself working with the cast and director in piecing together the small bits of information and clues that lead to the apprehension of the murder of a prominent physician.

Unlike most crime flickers that depend on factors unknown to the audience, this intriguing photo-crime carries the audience right along as Detective Thomas Mitchell and psychologist Lew Ayers unravel the threads. Miss De Haviland does double duty playing the role of identical twins, each of whom has a motive but no alibi for the crime.

The "Walls Came Tumbling Down" hews a little closer to the stock formula. Hollywood's idea of a newspaperman being the closest thing on earth to superman, Lee Bowman doubles in brass as a Broadway columnist and a supersleuth.

The mystery starts when Bowman finds his friend Father Walsh murdered. Without approaching a typewriter the entire length of the picture, he manages to track down two fabulous Bibles which contain the clue to the whereabouts of a famous painting. Assorted murders and violence do not deter Bowman and th lovely Marguerite Chapman from solving the crime.

"Nocturne" doesn't have the pat ending of "The Walls . . ." but it points up the moral that crime doesn't pay. That is for anyone except George Raft who has the enviable job of interviewing ten or eleven beauties in his quest for the criminal.

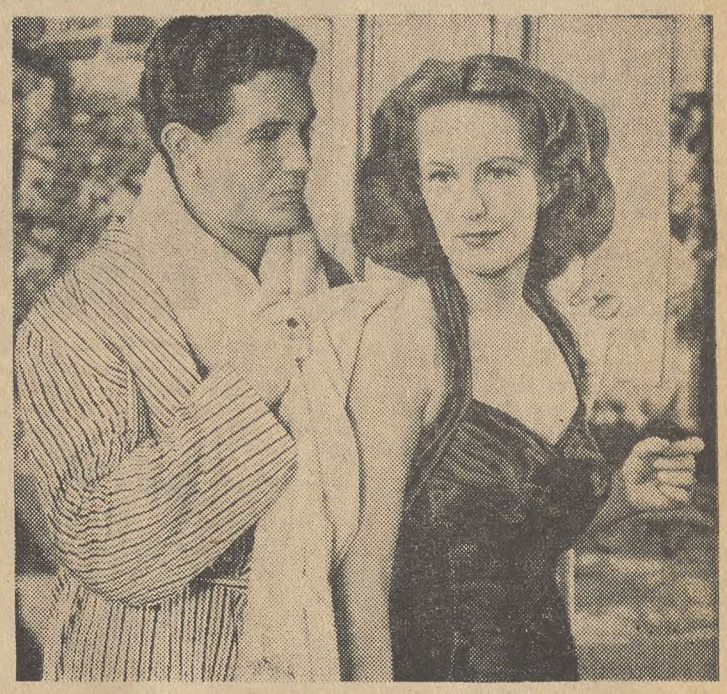
Raft plays the role of a detective who doesn't accept th official police verdict of suicide in the death of a philandering composer. He bats around from studio to dressing rooms to apartments until he hits the right trail. And, after a dozen (count 'em) leads, the script writers really had to pull a solution out of a magician's bag. The pic lacks the continuous action and zip needed to give emphasis to Raft's dead-pan stoic performance.

CLAUDE RAINS seems to be having a hey-day in Hollywood this year and the suave gentleman with the engaging smile is back playing the old devil himself in "Angel on My Shoulder."

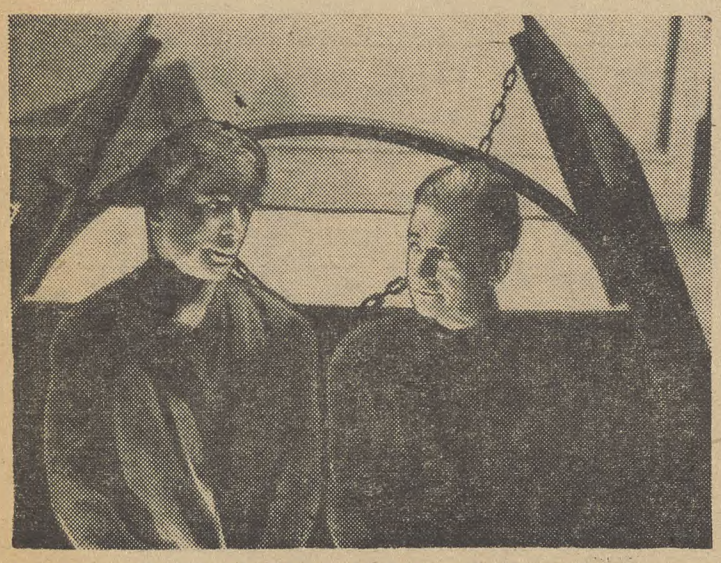
In this fantasy, the devil is worried about Judge Parker who is diverting too many souls upward. He spirits ex-gangster Paul Muni to earth to take care of the Judge. Muni who regards hell as just another prison makes the break in the hope of getting even with the doublecrossers who plugged him.

But, love and some uncomfortable sermonizing reform Muni and the devil is thwarted. Muni's portrayal of the gangster shows he hasn't lost his touch since "Scarface." He acts with an understanding that lends a fine touch of tragedy and even pathos to the characterization while Anne Baxter contributes the good influence.

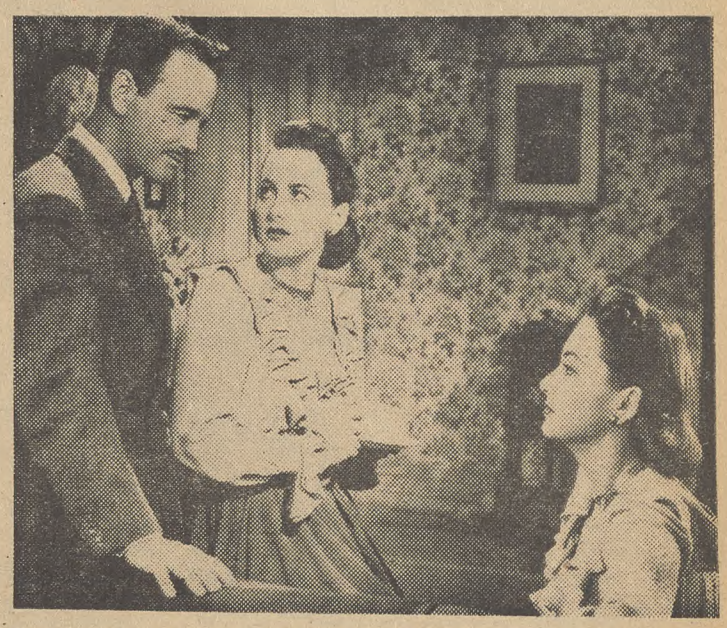
A social worker interviews the mother of Shirley Reynolds, wayward teen-ager, in a scene from British "Children on Trial." The film's message is that homes, such as one shown above, contribute heavily to juvenile delinquency.



The problem of the returning veteran isn't always as pleasant as John Garfield's task in "Nobody Lives Forever." Lovely Geraldine Fitzgerald captures the tough guy's heart and reforms the ex-gangster-GI.



Ex-gangster Paul Muni and the devil himself, Claude Rains, emerge onto New York's sidewalk after a trip from the internal regions. Scene is from Muni's latest melodrama, "Angel on My Shoulder."



Don't give up drinking. It is just Olivia De Haviland playing the dual role of twin sisters involved in the murder of a physician. Psychologist Lew Ayres helps solve the mystery in "The Dark Mirror."

BACK BREWERY UNION, MURRAY URGES

ALL CIO affiliates were strongly urged by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to give full support to the CIO Brewery Workers Union, which is resisting attempted raids by the AFL Teamsters, particularly in the western Pennsylvania area.

The Teamsters claim jurisdiction over drivers, despite the fact that the Brewery Workers union is organized on an industrial basis.

Following a brief explanation of the situation by Edward Hughlett, general recording secretary of the Brewery Workers, Murray told the CIO Convention that the Teamsters "have used every known means of coercion amongst the workers of the breweries in and around western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio and West Virginia to intimidate, to undermine and to create fear and in other respects to destroy that union."

Murray noted that the Brewery Workers have "one of the finest collective bargaining agreements outstanding anywhere in the U. S." with employers in the territory, and that it is not scheduled to expire until April, 1947.

DELEGATE Hughlett pointed out that the Brewery Workers Union was organized in 1886, that it was granted an industrial charter when it affiliated with the AFL in 1887, and that no union challenged its jurisdiction over all workers in breweries.

Twelve years later the Teamsters were organized and in 1900 launched their first attack on the Brewery Workers. Despite an agreement between the two unions in 1915 to grant full jurisdiction over brewery employes to the Brewery Workers, the Teamsters have continued to try to raid brewery drivers.

"The Teamsters," said Hughlett, "will hesitate to start anything on a very large scale in the future, simply because they know the CIO is ready and quick to defend us. We anticipate sporadic attacks here and there, however, and these must be met promptly and decisively."

RELIGIOUS STUDENTS ATTEND CIO MEET

Willard Uphaus, national director of the Religion & Labor Foundation, and a group of students from 17 Protestant seminaries in the East, South and Middlewest were introduced to the delegates at the CIO Convention last week by CIO Research & Education Director Kermit Eby, co-chairman of the Foundation.

The theological students were attending their own convention in Atlantic City, held concurrently with the CIO parley.

In a brief speech to the CIO delegates, Mr. Uphaus told them that a great number of young men and women in the theological field in America are anxious to understand labor's problems and "to work hand in hand" with union workers in building justice and democracy.

WIN 25% PAY HIKE FOR CBS WORKERS

A general 25% salary increase for 800 white colar workers at Columbia Broadcasting System has been won by Radio Guild, CIO Office and Professional Workers and will be included in a contract which will also provide for increased vacations, holidays with pay, and union security.

IT'S A LIE!

By MARTY SOLOW

HEY MAC! You get a raise last winter? Well—you're the guy that caused inflation. You're the guy who broke the price-line dikes. Who says so? The editorial writers, the big-shot columnists, the radio commentators and big business all have you tabbed as the boy who gummed up the works of price control.

If you've swallowed their hokum, you're a sucker and here's why: Bureau of Labor Statistics figures explode completely the notion that American workers received whopping big wage increases last winter which forced manufacturers to raise prices.

Only 25.6% of all workers in manufacturing industries received increased of 18½c or more, 13.5% were "enriched" by boosts ranging from 5c to 9c, and 21.3% received a big, fat NOTHING.

And this big lie, that wage increases forced prices up, is exposed still further by what's going on today.

When hides were decontrolled, hide prices doubled. There was no question of a wage increase for the workers. The manufacturers were just out for more dough.

When Pres. Truman lifted price controls everything began going up. The price of autos, radios, electrical appliances—name your product—all went up. They went up not because workers were receiving wage boosts but because employers were following time-honored business practices of gouging as much from the consumer as possible.

REMEMBER the squawk made by the steel companies when the steelworkers were asking for a wage increase? The steel firms forced the government to give them a $5-a-ton boost on the price of steel, when the steelworkers got their raise.

The third quarter report of U. S. Steel, recently published, shows up the phony claim for a steel price rise. For the whole year of 1945, Big Steel's cost for labor, per ton (this includes salaries, social-security tax and pensions) was $45.40. In the third quarter of 1946 the labor costs had DROPPED to $44.30 per ton.

Obviously the $5 boost was not needed to cover increased labor costs but rather to fill the already overstuffed pockets of the steel barons.

★ ★ ★

THIS FELLOW Robert R. Wason, president of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, shouldn't be allowed to run around loose the way he does. On Oct. 21 in Philadelphia he told the Associated Press: "During the past 15 years American industry has been prevented from producing goods."

A chart in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat (Republican paper) published on Nov. 15 reveals that the annual production output for CIVILIAN use in 1941 was $106 billion while the production figure for 1946, based on the third quarter rate, had reached $173 billion, highest in U. S. history.

Wason is evidently never disturbed by the existence of facts. On Nov. 14 at Atlantic City he said to a meeting of the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards that the real estate business was "an industry oppressed for four years, denied the right to a living, denied relief such as has been granted to other segments of the economy."

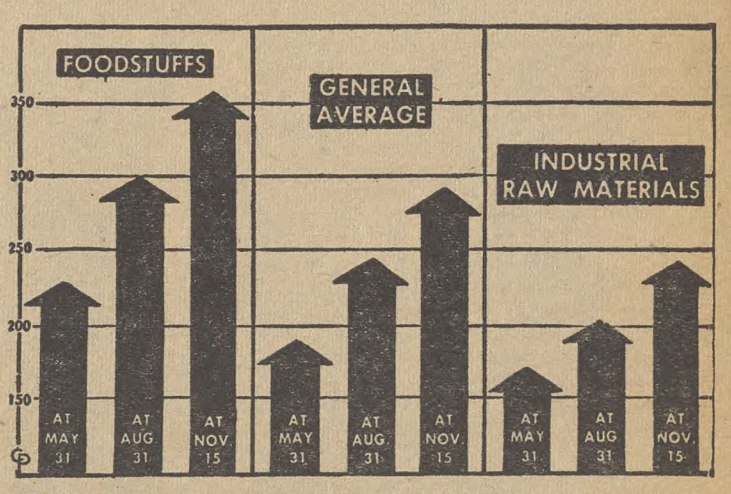
They knew that with apartments and commercial establishments 100% rented, with the costs for painting and repairs materially reduced (landlords are now permitted to paint every three or four years instead of the previous 1½ or two years), with under-the-table bonuses for renting apartments or commercial establishments, landlords were making more money than they had ever made.

And Real Estate Board profit figures bear that out—OPA figures reveal that landlords are making 24.9% more than in 1939.



This chart shows how removal of price controls slashed the buying power of the dollar. Based on an index in which Aug. 1939 prices represent 100, foodstuffs have edged over 350, with the general average and that of industrial raw materials also on a steady climb. And they're still going up. (Federated Pictures)

STATE COUNCIL MEETING

Officials of State CIO Councils will meet in Washigton Dec. 5-7 to discuss problems due to come before state legislatures, most of which will meet this January.

From 40 to 50 presidents, secretary-treasurers and legislative representatives of Councils will meet in the Board Room at CIO Headquarters, 718 Jackson Pl. N. W. according to Director John Brophy and his assistant, Anthony Wayne Smith.

The parley will follow a conference in Washington called by the U. S. Dept. of Labor for state labor comissioners and representatives of labor organizations, meeting Dec. 2-4.

THE importance of state legislatures to the labor movement was made clear at the CIO Convention by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel.

"There are at present laws outstanding which affect the right to picket, or rather which in effect purport to license or register unions, in the states of Alabama, Idaho, Kansas, South Dakota and Texas," Pressman said.

"There are laws requiring certain types of strike votes before you can engage in a strike, or which impose cooling off periods, now in the states of Alabama, Colorado, Florida, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.

"There are laws in various states which, in one way or another, limit your picketing or make boycotts illegal, or in one fashion or another weaken your organizational activtties. Those laws are in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Florida, Idaho, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, South Dakota, Texas and Wisconsin.

"We have laws which limit your right or eliminate your right to obtain union security in the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Kansas, Wisconsin, South Dakota, Nebraska and Arizona."

Pressman warned that the anti-labor work of the so-called Christian Americans would be augmented strongly next year by the Committee for Constitutional Government.

A new pamphlet put out by the Committee and written by a Mr. Scoville, the research director of the Chrysler Corp., says:

"What we should do is to repeal all labor laws on wages, hours of labor, collective bargaining, minimum wages, etc., and abolish all boards, bureaus and commissions that result from these laws."

Text of CIO Resolutions

Complete texts of all resolutions passed by the CIO Convention will be off the press and ready for distribution within the next fortnight.

The pamphlet entitled "Resolutions of the Eighth CIO Convention" will sell for 10c a copy; 100 copies for $7.50. Copies may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

ASK JOBLESS AID FOR ALL

WORKERS on strike should have the same right to compensation as that extended to other groups of the unemployed, the CIO Convention asserted last week in calling for passage of adequate legislation in the various states.

Compensation is denied workers in 43 states, the CIO pointed out in a resolution, with benefits available only in New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee and Louisiana.

Basic principle of unemployment compensation is to protect working men and women from hardship when they are out of work. The policy of 43 states is in direct conflict with this idea, the resolution said.

"It places a special government penalty on strikers," the CIO Convention charged. During recent strikes, long drawn-out by the refusal of industry to bargain in good faith, "these unemployment insurance disqualifications inflicted harsh injuries upon large numbers of American working men and women," the resolution said.

FOR U. S. EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

THE U. S. Employment Service, operated by Uncle Sam but turned over to the states earlier this year, should become a permanent branch of the federal government, the CIO Convention urged last week.

Existence of a national government employment service, administered "on a basis free of politics and discrimination," is of prime importance to all workers, the resolution said.

Both these factors entered the service when it reverted to the states, CIO said, and the agency was further weakened by making no provision for keeping on the job the majority of "efficient and experienced employees" in the USES.

CIO BACKS FORESTRY PROGRAM

Sounding a call for an immediate federal program to "save our forests," the CIO Convention last week urged the next Congress to adopt legislation helping timber owners to reduce waste in providing the nation's lumber supply.

A 9-point program, originally worked out by the Woodworkers Union, won full CIO approval. It calls for government help in providing technical and economic assistance to timber producers, financial bonuses for conservation practices, the development of scientific cutting plans, and the preservation in the public domain of some of the great remaining forest areas.

The resolution praised Rep. Frank Hook (D. Mich.) for introducing the program in the last Congress and expressed hope that a similar measure will be offered Congress next year.

STORES IN PRINCIPAL CITIES—GOOD DEALERS EVERYWHERE

Tomorrow's Citizens ● By Rose H. Alschuler

LITTLE MOTHERS

Baby sitting at so much an hour is working but sitting for free just because you happen to be the kid's sister is drudgery. To take care of a younger child is good for a girl—some of the time! Let's arrange to ask her help ahead of time, but not too often. Let's show her that the service is appreciated, not taken for granted.

Sprucing Up

LET'S LOOK AT YOUR WARDROBE

By HANNA SHERMAN

TAKE a look at your wardrobe and decide here and now what you will not buy in the near future. There is really no better plan for defeating inflation than to ask the price, say "No thank you," and proudly wear what you already own. If enough of us do this, we may find that in the Spring when a young girl's really fancy, prices will again be within reason.

Learn the art of caring for your clothes. It will add months to their wear. Here is a good trick for keeping your everyday suits and dresses fresh and new looking. When you get home, change into slacks and a shirt, a comfortable housecoat, or a dress that is designed for casual wear.

Brush your clothes when you take them off. Keeping a brush near your closet will develop this habit. Check your clothing regularly for torn hems, ripped seams and loose or lost buttons. Then hang your day's costume on a closet door overnight to insure proper airing. Take a cue from the men and keep your clothes well pressed.

Shoes have skyrocketed in price in the last couple of weeks. So take good care of the ones you have. Never let the heels of your shoes run over or allow the stitching or buckles to come loose.

Alternate the wearing of two pairs or more of shoes to help keep them in shape. When you take your shoes off, put shoetrees in them right away and, of course, polish or brush them.

WHEN your precious footwear needs cobbling, take them to the best shoemaker you can find and have the entire sole replaced. A good shoe-repair man should also reblock your shoes.

In bad weather, wear boots to keep your shoes dry. If they do get wet in spite of your best efforts, stuff them with newspaper and let them dry out naturally. Never dry wet shoes by a fire or radiator.

Many clever girls wear their colorful summer play shoes indoors. This saves some of the wear and tear on their precious date and business shoes.

Handbags, too, have felt the inflationary fever. Treat the ones you have gently. Polish leather bags with saddle soap. And keep the inside of your bag as clean and neat as you can. Your handbags will retain their shape if they are free of unnecessary extras.

Remember this, too. An efficiently arranged closet with everything in its place is not old maidish. Its downright practical. Invest in padded hangers for your dresses. Prevent snags by keeping your stockings in lined boxes. Nightly washing of girdles, hose and underwear will add to their life.

WHY WOMEN WORK

MOST women who work do so because they have to support themselves and often others as well. They aren't on the job to be able to spend more on clothes or to make pin money, as some employers and others like to think.

This fact stands out clearly in a bulletin just released by the Women's Bureau, U. S. Dept. of Labor, summarizing a survey of the postwar job plans of women workers in 10 war-production centers. The report shows the effect in the postwar period of changes in employment of women wrought by the war.

Based on interviews with more than 13,000 women workers in all kinds of jobs except household employment, the sample survey was made during 1944-45 in ten metropolitan areas varying in size, location and type of war production. These were Baltimore, Buffalo, Dayton, Detroit, Kenosha, Mobile, San Francisco, Seattle, Springfield (Mass.) and Wichita.

Investigators found that of every 100 women expecting to continue work after the war, 84 said they had to support themselves and in most cases others as well. An additional 8 of every 100 gave as reasons for working —to own a home, to be free from debt, or to educate their children; and the remaining 8 worked primarily because of interest in the job.

Of the women living in a family group, more than 50 per cent gave more than half their take-home pay to the family and 15 per cent were the only wage earners contributing to the family.

The bulletin, entitled "Women Workers in Ten War Production Areas and Their Postwar Employment Plans," may be purchased for 15c from the Supt. of Documents, Gov. Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

CHILD LABOR FIGURES HIGH

Although child labor has decreased somewhat since the pressure of war production has ended, it is still high. About 40 per cent of civilian young from 14 to 17 years of age were at work during the summer of 1946, according to estimates of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

In urging extension of the child-labor provision of the Federal Wage-Hour Law to types of interstate business not now covered, Beatrice McConnell, asst. director of the Division of Labor Standards in charge of the Child Labor and Youth Employment Branch, said:

"The protection of the law stood children in good stead during the war, and it is especially important now to guard against any letdown." There is still a fringe of employers, she stated, "who will take a chance on employing children illegally, just as they will on violating the wage and hour provisions of the Federal law."

Enforcement of the Wage-Hour law has provided convincing proof, Miss McConnell declared, that adult workers as well as young workers, and also employers, benefit from the elimination of oppressive child labor.

POOR KIDS GET RAW DEAL

How badly the Nation's children stand in need of the protective measures recommended in the legislative program presented last week at the CIO convention is shown in some of the appalling facts and figures reported at the Natl. Conference for Prevention and Control of Juvenile Delinquency now being held in Washington under the auspices of the Dept. of Justice.

The shameful neglect of wealthy America's children of the poor—for child delinquents come mostly from poor families—was revealed in such things as these reported by various panels of the conference:

- Many of the present training schools for juvenile delinquents are "dumping grounds" like almshouses of 100 years ago.
- No State or community has as yet developed comprehensive social services for children. Only one-sixth of the counties have child-welfare workers paid from public funds.
- An estimated 300,000 young people are placed in jails or detention homes every year. Many are thrown into jails. Some states have detained as many as 4,000 children in jails in one year.
- At least 250,000 children come to the attention of juvenile courts as delinquents each year, but no single state has a juvenile court law measuring up in every respect to the standards proposed in the model Juvenile Court Act sponsored by the U. S. Children's Bureau and the Natl. Probation Assn.

REVIEW FEATURES SOUTHERN LABOR

Labor conditions in the South are dealt with in a specialized issue of the Monthly Labor Review, issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor. The development of the trade-union movement, the labor force, wage differentials, income, State labor legislation and consumer cooperatives are the subjects of articles devoted to that section of the country.

PROMPTED BY HER FATHER — OWNER OF THE WARRENTOWN MILLS — RUBY CARRUTHERS TAKES ADVANTAGE OF LUNCH HOUR TO DRIVE JIM TO A PICNIC SPOT... AND LOSES NO TIME IN TRYING TO FIND OUT WHAT KIND OF MAN HE IS...

I WANT TO KNOW YOU BETTER, JIM... AND I'M GOING TO FIND OUT FOR MYSELF! LIKE THIS —

WHA—

WELL... YOU ARE AN INTERESTING MAN! I'M NOT DISAPPOINTED...

I'M GLAD YOU'RE NOT... BUT I AM! I THINK WE BETTER GO BACK.

YOU MAY BE THE BOSS'S DAUGHTER, MISS CARRUTHERS — BUT YOU'VE GOT THE WRONG GUY THIS TIME. I COME FROM A DIFFERENT KIND OF WORLD!

I...I DON'T UNDERSTAND, JIM.

THERE'S NOTHING MUCH TO UNDERSTAND, MISS CARRUTHERS. I'M A POOR WORKING STIFF — AND ALL I'VE GOT IN THE WORLD IS MY ABILITY TO SELL THE MUSCLES IN MY ARMS... TO MAKE THE RICH RICHER.

BUT I HAVEN'T EVEN GOT THAT —

YOU... OR RATHER YOUR FATHER HAS THE MONEY TO BUY OR SELL GUYS LIKE ME. AND YOU AND I WILL NEVER SEE THE WORLD THE SAME WAY.

JIM... YOU... YOU'RE WRONG. IT DOESN'T HAVE TO BE THAT WAY.

SURE — IT DOESN'T HAVE TO BE THAT WAY... BUT THAT'S HOW IT IS NOW. WE'VE GOT TO RECOGNISE WHAT EXISTS — NOT WHAT WE THINK SHOULD EXIST. SO YOU AND I... WELL, SO LONG, MISS CARRUTHERS.

NO, WAIT, JIM! WAIT!

HE'S A STRANGE MAN ALL RIGHT... NO WONDER DAD IS CURIOUS ABOUT HIM... AND I ACTED LIKE A DAMN FOOL... FORGETTING MYSELF... BUT HE ISN'T GOING TO WALK OUT OF MY LIFE JUST LIKE THAT... I WON'T LET HIM!

I DON'T GET IT... THE BOSS'S DAUGHTER THROWING HERSELF ON ME FIRST TIME WE MEET... I WONDER IF OLD MAN CARRUTHERS SET HER ON ME... DIRTY TRICK IF HE DID...

... BUT THEN — SHE MAY REALLY BE BORED WITH THE RICH, PLAYBOY PUNKS SHE RUNS AROUND WITH AND —

JIM!

KIT! WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE IN THE SHIPPING DEPARTMENT?

URGE WYATT PLAN FOR VETS' HOMES

PRESIDENT TRUMAN was asked in a telegram today by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and R. J. Thomas, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, to meet the five-point housing program demanded by Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt.

At the same time, Thomas charged that the nation's real estate lobby, in fighting both the national housing program and continued rent control, "is offering the ex-GIs of this country only a house of cards, to be blown away with the first oratorical winds of the Eightieth Congress."

"Wilson Wyatt has requested you:

"1. To continue controls over distribution of building materials and retention of price limits on new homes;

"2. To reaffirm his powers to allocate federal resources in support of the veterans' emergency housing program;

"3. To encourage further measures to produce rental housing;

"4. To again request immediate passage of the Wagner General Housing Bill;

"5. Above all, to request the Reconstruction Finance Corp. to make the loans to factory producers of industrialized housing, as Wyatt recommends.

"Your strong reaffirmation of the existence of a veterans' housing emergency and your determination to meet it through the above emergency measures required to assure veterans of their government's commitment to supply them with critical shelter, still holds."

THOMAS, in his statement, declared:

"Americans can take pride in the courage and skill with which a party of 12 stranded citizens were removed from a Swiss mountainside last week.

"They should be ashamed, however, of our government's failure to rescue the thousands upon thousands of veterans in this country who will sleep tonight and every night on cold park benches, in tents and makeshift huts. And millions more are domiciled in badly overcrowded quarters.

"While these veterans suffer from our housing famine, private building interests are sniping at Wilson Wyatt's government housing program at the very moment that it is starting to deliver the goods.

"It is understandable that, during the last session of Congress, the coalition of reactionary Republicans and polltax Southern Democrats fought price controls, veterans housing and the Wagner-Ellender-Taft general housing bill.

"But I cannot understand why this Administration permits a fifth-column agent of the old-fashioned housing interests to sit on the top councils of the Reconstruction Finance Corp. and sabotage the granting of loans to companies ready and eager to turn out in mass quantities the factory-made homes so necessary to reducing our national shortages of living space.

"The housing lobby is offering the ex-GI's of this country a house of cards, to be blown away with the first oratorical gales of the Eightieth Congress.

"American veterans, who fought our country's battles in muddy foxholes, are well aware that the dream house of a speech on free enterprise 'profits-as-usual' cannot keep out the winter winds.

"Either we build homes for our vets through Wilson Wyatt's housing program or we should tell the veterans frankly that homes in the number that are needed are not going to be built.

"If we are going to build homes let us support the Wyatt program to the hilt—and permit no interference from reactionary Congressmen, from affluent spokesmen of the private housing lobby, or their agents in government."

BILBO ON SPOT DECEMBER 2

Is Sen. Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi, the Capitol Hill spokesman for race-baiters and foes of democracy, fit to sit in the U. S. Senate?

That question will be discussed in some detail starting Dec. 2, when the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee opens hearings on the subject at Jackson, Miss.

Complaints against Bilbo's right to serve stem from speeches made by the Senator just prior to last summer's primary elections, when he made numerous remarks interpreted as a call to violence against Negroes who might wish to exercise their right to vote in the polltax state.

The CIO Convention voted "full support" for efforts to bar Bilbo from office, on the basis that he secured his election through terror. It stated that Bilbo is an "avowed member of the Ku Klux Klan" and an enemy of labor, and has been accused of receiving war contracts bribes amounting to $100,000.

In New York, the Oust Bilbo Committee, affiliated to the Civil Rights Congress, has started circulation of popular petitions demanding his removal from the Senate.

Gloria Chaplan (l.) of Asheville, N. C., and Kitty Reed of Oxford, Miss., help the 'Oust Bilbo' campaign by filling bushel baskets with oust-Bilbo buttons in N. Y. Petitions are circulating throughout the nation as efforts to unseat Sen. Theodore H. Bilbo (D., Miss.) gain in momentum. (Federated Pictures)

KEEP RENT CONTROL!

Rent control must be continued to ward off "an unbearable hardship on families already struggling to make ends meet under the pressure of rising prices," the CIO Convention declared last week.

"Removal of rent control would place American workers and their families at the mercy of real estate interests eager to take advantage of the existing housing shortage to increase their own already substantial profits," a Convention resolution stated.

The Convention urged members and unions to inform President Truman and OPA Administrator Paul Porter that they insist that controls be kept on rents and to ask that State and city officials point out the dangerous consequences of possible abandonment of the last degree of protection against the hardships of unlimited inflation.

Wood-Rankin Too!

POLLTAX MUST GO, SAYS CIO

END the polltax! Stop the Wood-Rankin Committee! These two demands were voiced by the CIO Convention last week in resolutions directed at institutions eating into the progressive traditions of the American people.

The polltax, CIO said, is undermining the right to vote in the South, and other practices limiting the franchise are finding increasing favor in reactionary circles.

Meanwhile, it added, the Wood-Rankin "un-American" committee has subjected "every democratic and progressive movement in America . . . to its vicious smears."

"The CIO affirms its unqualified opposition to this un-American committee and pledges itself to work unceasingly against its reconstitution by the new Congress," the statement said.

Target of the Wood-Rankin smears, it added, are "Jews, Negroes, and other minority groups who do not conform to the bigoted creed of Congressman Rankin of Mississippi and his colleagues. It furnishes to Gerald L. K. Smith a welcome forum for spreading anti-labor propaganda."

The Convention adopted a resolution branding the polltax as a "blot on the pages of American democracy"; charged that it has "fostered evils and disinterest in elections"; and has permitted the election of persons "representing less than 20% of the eligible citizens of their district."

But other devices are also being used to keep American citizens from practicing their voting rights, the resolution said.

It cited the "white primary," held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court but flouted in the South through "open intimidation," phoney literacy tests, and evasive reorganization of primary laws. As a result, the resolution pointed out, "our Negro citizens in the South continue to be denied the right of suffrage in the primaries."

Vote-limiting schemes are being practiced throughout the entire country, however. The statement referred to gerrymandering tactics, through which Congressional districts are set up in such a way as to give rural areas an advantage over the cities.

Injunctions Blasted

The Natl. Lawyers Guild last week asked permission to file a brief as a friend of the court in the Mine Workers trial. The affidavit of NLG Executive Sec. Martin Popper challenging the government's anti-UMW injunction, read in part:

"The NLG believes that the present proceeding arises from a labor dispute within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia act and the court was therefore without jurisdiction to issue the restraining order and is presently without power to punish the defendants for their alleged contempt.

"The NLG is very much concerned about the use of injunctive process in labor disputes. It is of the opinion that such use is contrary to the policy of this government as now established by statute and judicial decision. It believes that the injunction is not merely an improper but an ineffective means of the attempted settlement of labor disputes."

NAM 'LIBERALISM' AIMED TO TAKE LABOR FOR A RIDE

THE National Assn. of Manufacturers this week mounted its newly whitewashed horse, decked out in what it called "positive liberalism" trappings, and prepared to ride roughshod over Labor and the American people.

Meeting in the swank Waldorf Astoria in N. Y. City for its 51st Annual Congress of Industry, the nation's leading industrialists who control over 80% of the country's manufacturing facilities, pounded out a program aimed at dividing, isolating and suppressing labor, and developing greater "liberty of enterprise."

For three days the 2,560 NAM members who represented industrialists employing 10 million workers heard attack after attack on labor or the "Lewis, Murray, Petrillo axis." The coal strike furnished the quarry and the manufacturers took the trail, scenting blood.

Sharing the vitriolic attacks on labor were denunciations of "collectivism" which amounted to a collection of communism, socialism, unionism and cooperativism. Fascism was not even whispered.

The NAM's call to arms not only included its highly intensified drive against labor, but continued its attack on all forms of government controls, and increased its hammering at taxation and government spending.

The delegates coming from large and small industrial plants in every section of the country, sat stolidly in the Waldorf Astoria Grand Ballroom and listened to the big wheels of industry grind out the current NAM line. Discussion from the floor is an unheard of business at NAM conventions.

The line differed from its former position only in the way it was to be dished out to the American "public". Plans for the doubling of its last year's $3 million public relations budget were set and the publicity actions which NAM press agents boasted had broken OPA were to be intensified in its planned attack on labor.

RELUCTANTLY admitting that employers "should be required by law to bargain collectively with a union," the NAM board of directors added a few ifs and buts. The latest one is "if the union is a democratic and responsible institution."

Twisting the people's hatred against monopolies around to fit their needs, the NAM declared "monopolistic practices in restraint of trade are inherently contrary to the public interest and should be prohibited to labor unions as well as to employers."

The NAM directors said "it is just as contrary to public interest to take joint wage action as for organized employers to take joint price action." The statement was aimed at labor's impending wage negotiations.

The statement indicated that the industrials are not only worried about labor's continued exposure of their monopolistic practices, but are attempting to steal the march on one of labor's chief weapons.

THE shining knight of the NAM, Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R., Minn.) took up the NAM's poison-tipped spear. He told the industrialists to let Congress do the job for them.

After promising action against the closed and union shop "and all other forms of contract making membership in a union a condition of employment," Ball warned that his suggested action must not be taken "as a signal to embark on a drive to destroy unions."

If employers took the changes as a signal of union-busting campaigns," he added, "then I can assure you that the changes will be repealed soon, and we will have an even more lop-sided and partisan policy than we have now."

His suggested changes, greeted with prolonged applause, called for an "overhauling" of the NLRB. Hauled into his suggestions was the demand that an "employer should have the right to say that those workers still out (on strike) are no longer his employes and request a new election to determine the bargaining agent for those who really are working for him."

Hits 'Loaded' Radio Shows

A charge that even murder mysteries on the radio are loaded with anti-labor propaganda was made to the Federal Communications Commission this week by Jack Lawrenson, vice-president of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union.

Lawrenson urged an immediate FCC investigation of the situation and the issuance of "a public statement condemning this deliberate policy of poisoning the air waves."

He quoted from a story carried in the entertainment paper Variety, which was headlined:" "Rap 'Loaded' Radio Scripts; Writers Burn at Big Biz Ideology."

The article said: "In one recent show, a writer of a whodunit had both murdered man and the hero of the piece members of the Natl. Maritime Union.

"In that way, he thought, he was being fair. The sponsor wanted him to make only the murderer a member of the union. When the scripter pointed the possibilty of libel in such a scene, he was told to change the whole show, leaving out all mention of the union."

PROTECTION FOR THE OLD

AN industry-wide old-age retirement plan goes into effect some time next month in the men's and boys' clothing trades.

Workers, who have reached the age of 70 and seen 20 years service in the industry, can voluntarily quit work and obtain pensions which will match, dollar for dollar, funds paid out to them by the government under its social security program. In 1948, men and women in the industry will be able to retire at 65.

The announcement was made jointly by Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Raymond H. Reiss, president of the Clothing Manufacturers' Assn. of the U. S., in contractual relations with the union. Hyman Blumberg, executive vice president of the Amalgamated, will administer the pension disbursements on behalf of the union.

It was estimated that, for 70-year-olds, $1,500,000 will be paid out annually and that 2,200 union members will be the beneficiaries. Reserves are now being built up to permit retirement, some time in 1948, for Amalgamated members who have reached the age of 65 in the clothing industry.

The old-age retirement fund was created Dec. 10, 1945 as a result of industry-wide negotiations in the men's and boys' clothing trades. The employers agreed to contribute 3% on their weekly payrolls to the retirement fund, the workers being required to make no payments.

THE pension fund supplements a comprehensive system of life, health, accident, hospitalization and maternity insurance previously set up in the industry through collective bargaining and for which the employers pay 2% on their weekly payrolls.

The Amalgamated Insurance Fund, jointly administered by labor and management, has been created to handle all insurance contributions, while the Amalgamated Life and Health Insurance Co. has been formed to handle the benefit payments.

Both Potofsky and Reiss expressed gratification over the retirement fund operations. They said:

"While the payments and the 70-year retirement age are only modest beginnings, we feel we have taken a long step in the right direction. Both labor and the clothing industry, which have pioneered in social welfare long before it was undertaken as a government policy, believe that the industry retirement benefits, plus those paid by the government, now substantially relieve the problems of our aged workers who have spent their productive lives in the industry.

"We have every hope of reducing the retirement age to 65 in 1948. Thus, a larger number of workers in our industry will be able to enjoy these pension benefits for a longer span. We know they have deserved them, and we wish that, in the evening of their lives, they will be able to enjoy the rest, relaxation, freedom from fear and insecurity they are entitled to."

Auto Plan

SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAM PUSHED

THE CIO Auto Workers Union this week announced a proposed social insurance program, to be financed by employers.

Details of the proposal were forwarded to local unions by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, chairman of the UAW's social security committee.

The program is designed to give workers protection in event of sickness, disability and death. It was included in the union's wage policy recently adopted by the International Executive Board.

Reuther notified all locals to incorporate the provisions of the program in their wage demands.

The union's social security committee is also formulating an old-age pension plan to supplement the inadequate Federal Social Security Act.

The union social insurance program calls for an employer contribution amounting to 3% of the gross earnings of employes. The money from this would provide benefits in the event of sickness or accident amounting to not less than 50% of average earnings, for a maximum of 52 weeks in the case of any one disability.

The program also calls for hospital, surgical, medical and maternity benefits, and death or survivors' benefits. In the case of total and permanent disability, workers would receive as a minimum the equivalent of one year's average annual earnings.

FOR A FULL BELLY THE YEAR ROUND

Guaranteed Wage Plans Have Weathered Depressions. Their Cost To Industry Is Small, Their Benefit to the Nation's Welfare Is Enormous. A Government Study Has Found Them Practical. Here's the Story.

Guaranteed Wages...

BY FRED d'AVILA

AS THE million-strong CIO Steelworkers Union goes into collective bargaining conferences in 1947, it will have solid support for one of the foremost causes championed by Pres. Philip Murray—the guaranteed annual wage.

The aid is contained in a voluminous study compiled by Murray W. Latimer and submitted as an interim report to the Advisory Board of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion.

The report says that guaranteed annual wage plans would provide millions of workers with the security so essential to physical and mental health, and that 23 such plans have practically proved that they could weather the worst depressions that the U. S. has experienced.

The report declares that guaranteed annual wages can be paid by business at small cost, and that their aid to workers, farmers, the businessmen themselves, and the general public will help to combat the boom and bust chaos that the country has endured.

THE Steel union's bargaining conferences, which will include negotiations for 25,000 employes of the Aluminum Co. of America, will be closely watched by the millions of American workers who stood in bread lines, existed on relief or were forced out of their homes in the early 1930's.

A quarter of the labor force was totally unemployed in 1933, and nearly 10% was still out of work in 1941. The lay-off rate never fell below 25% in any year in the 30's.

"These figures," says the government report, "indicate the magnitude of the problem of attaining economic security. Although we have learned much about how to deal with economic fluctuations, we have not yet, in peacetime, demonstrated that we can eliminate them over any extended period."

What contribution can the guaranteed annual wage make? The record tells the story—in a small way, but significantly.

"Eleven out of 184 currently operating plans for which this information is available have been in operation for 25 years. They have experienced and survived the economic setbacks which began in 1920, 1929 and 1937. Practically all of these plans involved relatively small establishments which guaranteed wages to a staff of regular employes. Even in bad times and despite losses, the employer kept his employes at work. An additional 12 plans began operation between 1921 and 1929.

"Thus, contrary to a fairly prevalent impression that practically no privately operated and financed plans providing income security to workers survived the economic holocaust of the 1930's, records are now available of a total of 23 guaranteed wage plans which not only came through the great depression of the early 1930's but also survived the severe recession of 1937-38 and have been subject to the unstabilizing influences of World War II."

THE report said that guarantees offered under the bulk of the plans are substantial. In almost 95% the guarantee covers "full pay"—scaling downward from the 65% that guarantee 12 months' pay to the 18% that offer from 10 to 11 months.

"It is these plans," the report stated, "which attest the practicability of considering substantial guarantees of earnings for substantially all employes. While guaranteed wage plans are to be found predominantly in industries making non-durable products for consumer use, in trade and service industries and in public utilities and transportation, there have been a few plans in heavy industries.

"While the number of workers covered by guaranteed wage plans is insignificant in relation to the totals for the U.S., it is large enough and distributed among enough establishments of diverse size, location and industry to establish the feasibility of guarantee plans."

GUARANTEED wage plans, the report asserted, have had a twin objective —security for the workers and achievement of economies for the employers. The economies which an employer might expect are those which flow from improved labor relations, lower turnover, a more efficient working force and a higher productivity rate.

Costs, the report maintained, are within practical limits.

"Average costs of guaranteeing substantially all employes full-time wages for a year, if the fluctuations in employment volume experienced in the years 1937-41 were repeated, would vary from 1.3% of actual payroll in a paper company to 20% in a steel company, in six establishments studied," the report stated.

"But by limiting liability in any one year to 10% of the guaranteed payroll in that year, the average costs can be held to 5.8% of the actual payroll, or less, in the above-mentioned steel case, and considerably smaller percentages in other cases."

THE cost of guaranteeing annual wages would be small in comparison with the contribution they would make toward stabilizing our economy, guaranteeing high farm income, etc. Reviewing unemployment figures during the depressions, the report said:

"The cost of idle men and machines is enormous. In 1932 and 1933 the people of the U.S. could have enjoyed 50% more goods and services than were actually produced, had our full productive resources been utilized. Over the whole 12-year period 1930-41, we could have produced—and consumed — 22% more than we actually did.

"The principal loser, but by no means the only one, was the American worker. Total unemployment, and the partial loss of income, through reduced hours of work, which affected millions of workers, also threatened the security of other millions. A decline in business volume converted profits into losses, a wave of bankruptcies and liquidations wiped out the equities of many investors, a sharp reduction in farm prices cut farm income disastrously. Economic security was found to be indivisible."

...Would Help Prevent Insecurity

A BLOW AT LIBERTY

By CIO Pres. PHILIP MURRAY

AT its recent convention the Congress of Industrial Organizations condemned the action of the Federal Government in seeking a sweeping injunction against the United Mine Workers of America in the current dispute involving the mine workers of the nation.

We then stated that any such injunction would be a clear violation of the Norris-LaGuardia Act and of the constitutional rights of the members of that organization.

In April of this year the United States Government, in a case in the Supreme Court, made it clear that the Norris-LaGuardia Act applies in suits brought by the government itself. At page 6 of the brief filed in the case of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners vs. The United States of America, government lawyers openly conceded that the Norris-LaGuardia Acts binds the government. The brief contained the following statement:

"That suits by the Government are not exempt from the (Norris-LaGuardia) Act is clear from its history. Among the instances of the abuse of the injunctive process which Congress had in mind was the injunction obtained by Attorney General Daugherty from Judge Wilkerson in the shopmen's strike in 1922. And in United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U. S. 219, 227, the (Supreme) Court stated that 'Concededly an injunction either at the suit of the Government or of the employer could not issue'."

THE action of the Federal Court in imposing a fine of $3,500,000 on the United Mine Workers of America and a $10,000 fine upon John L. Lewis, at the request of the government, is a shocking attempt to force American citizens to work against their will through economic coercion.

During the past ten years our economic history reveals a tremendous acceleration of the process of monopoly—yet no court during this period has imposed comparable fines upon the malefactors of great wealth who are destroying our system of free enterprise in open disregard of the Anti-Trust Laws. Every worker and every fair-minded citizen can only contrast the savage character of the sanctions invoked against the Mine Workers with the extraordinary tenderness displayed by the courts toward employers and their interests.

DURING the 11 years since the passage of the Wagner Act, hundreds of employers have openly flouted court decrees holding them in violation of the Wagner Act. Yet courts have consistently refused to impose fines upon the most contemptuous employers who have set themselves above the law and imperiled the public interest to an incalculable extent.

Clearly, anti-labor injunctions cannot dispose of the problems now confronting workers who see their earnings shrink before the fast rising cost of living. American democracy is not based upon economic slavery but rather upon the enjoyment of precious liberties which are attacked by the injunction in the Mine Workers case.

The CIO owes a responsibility to its millions of members to whom liberty is a precious possession. We therefore intend to take whatever steps are necessary to participate in the appeal to the Federal Court's decision. We have learned through the bitter experience of other countries that liberty is indivisible and that a blow at the liberties of the miners is a blow at the liberty of all of us.

BY LEN DE CAUX

Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, takes over for Len De Caux this week in the publicity director's absence on business

ONE OF the anti-labor bills put through in the last session of Congress and signed by the President was the Lea Bill, more popularly known as the anti-Petrillo Bill. While the bill was pending in Congress, and again when it was before the President for signature, the CIO warned that in addition to other reasons for not passing it, the bill was clearly unconstitutional. Nevertheless the bill became law.

On Dec. 3, a U. S. District Court decision in Chicago found that the Lea Bill violates three different provisions of the U. S. Constitution. This decision restates and re-emphasizes some very important principles which ought to be a warning to the labor-baiters in Congress who are issuing daily and dire threats about what they plan to do in the next session.

The Lea Bill made it a crime in any way to seek to compel an employer in the broadcasting business to employ more workers than are "needed" by him.

As the CIO pointed out while the bill was pending in Congress, this language means—and the supporters of the bill admitted this—that even perfectly peaceful strike and picketing activity could become a crime if the purpose of the strike was to compel the employer to hire more people than the employer thought he needed.

AFTER THE law was passed, the Dept. of Justice made perfectly clear how far it considered this law to go. The Department started a prosecution against Petrillo, charging that he violated the Act by demanding that a radio station employ more than the three musicians which the station already employed, and by calling a strike of those three musicians in support of this demand.

The crime charged against Petrillo involved nothing more than the fact that he called a strike of three musicians and arranged for one picket in front of the radio station. All of this was done in support of a demand that the radio station employ a few additional musicians.

For these acts the Dept. of Justice sought to convict him, under a statute which permits imprisonment for one year or a $1,000 fine or both.

The court's decision is an excellent restatement of some very important principles which were tossed aside by Congress, the President and the Dept. of Justice.

The court points out that the law is vague when it speaks of "the number of employes needed" by the radio station. There can be many opinions as to whether safety considerations, esthetic standards, or other factors indicate a need for more or less employes. The court says that it is unconstitutional to say that a demand is criminal depending on whether the employer thinks he needs additional men or not.

The court points out also that the law is unconstitutional by arbitrarily selecting radio employes as the ones to be subject to such a law.

★ ★ ★

MOST IMPORTANT of all, however, is the court's decision on the rights of free speech and of the right to be free from involuntary servitude.

One of the charges against Petrillo was that he tried to enforce his request for the employment of more musicians by arranging for a picket in front of the radio station. The picketing was entirely peaceful. The court reiterated the principle laid down over and over again by the U. S. Supreme Court that:

". . . Peaceful picketing is a form of speech and discussion that cannot under the First or Fourteenth Amendments be curtailed by any legislative enactment."

On the subject of involuntary servitude the court noted that another excuse given by the Dept. of Justice for the prosecution was that Petrillo had caused three musicians to go on strike. The 13th Amendment prohibiting involuntary servitude, prohibits such a prosecution, said the court. The Judge declared:

"Under the 13th Amendment the right of any worker to leave his employment at will, or for no reason at all, is protected and that right is inviolate."

Millions to Millionaires, Pennies to the Poor

THE 20% across-the-board tax "reduction" program suggested by various Republican Congressmen and seconded even more vigorously by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce is a fraud, according to Sen. Glenn H. Taylor (D., Ida.)

"Across-the-board reductions," Taylor said this week, "are unfair to the lower brackets. They will give millions to the millionaires and pennies to the poor.

"For example, under Rep. Knutson's (R., Mich.) 20% reduction proposal, a married man with two children who makes $3,000 a year would have his taxes cut by $27.50 a year.

"An individual with a millon dollar income would have his taxes cut $167,683.55.

"Congress," Taylor pointed out, "has already given a tax rebate to the rich through the repeal of the excess profits tax. It would be grossly unfair to bestow an additional gift upon them, at the expense of wage and salary earners."

Taylor, instead, offered a tax reduction program calling for a rise in the exemption level to "about $3,000" for a family of four. The program "would lay stress on reductions in the middle and lower income levels and would remove all excise taxes except on luxuries."

Taylor said that his program follows the principle of ability to pay. He added that unless tax relief is provided immediately, thousands of families will be seriously affected by the reduced purchasing power of wages due to rising prices.

COURT KILLS LEA ANTI-LABOR ACT

THE Lea "anti-Petrillo" act, one of the 79th Congress' gifts to the nation's anti-labor forces, went down the drain last week, speeded on its way by a U. S. District Court pronouncement that the law was unconstitutional five different ways.

The act was admitted by its sponsors as a direct attempt to limit the powers of James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), and of the musicians union. CIO opposed the bill in Congress on the grounds of constitutionality and of its effect in curbing the rights of all unions.

In ruling on the law, Judge Walter La Buy of the U. S. District Court in Chicago had this to say about the anti-labor measure:

"It violates the Fifth Amendment (of the Constitution) because of indefiniteness and uncertainty in the definition of a criminal offense; violates the First Amendment by its restriction upon freedom of speech by peaceful picketing; violates the Fifth and Thirteenth Amendments by its restriction upon employment of labor, and violates the Fifth Amendment by an arbitrary classification as between employers and employes and as to other communication industries."

The case arose over a dispute between Radio Station WAAF in Chicago and the musicians union. The station complained that the union was forcing it to employ three more technicians than it claimed to need for its staff, and that after it had refused to add these persons to its payroll, the union placed a picket line around the station.

By attempting to regulate whether any worker may leave his job, the Lea Act runs counter to the 13th Amendment, the court held. It also noted that the law singled out broadcasting employes in a discriminatory fashion.

"The freedom to quit and refuse to undertake work may as readily be exercised through a group organization as individually," Judge La Buy declared.

"This statute could be used to deprive the members of the musicians union of the right to quit work collectively as a means of enforcing their demands with reference to the making of a new contract."

SAYS CLOSED SHOPS AID LABOR RELATIONS

Closed shop agreements, which are helpful for producing industrial peace and stability, have been attacked by big employers with the hope of causing deliberate confusion, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey charged last week.

"The closed shop is a working condition," he declared in the course of an American Forum of the Air broadcast. Carey added that it "bears the same relationship to the plant's labor relations as does a clause prohibiting abuse or vilification of workers to a foreman."

The CIO official charged that "those who speak of the closed shop as unconstitutional are really arguing that one man should be permitted to impose his personal desires on a number of other men, or even on one other man. It seems to me that their rights run collaterally with his rights."

Election Probe Shows

VIOLENCE HELPED BILBO WIN

MISSISSIPPI Negroes this week arose to the challenge of race hate designed to rob them of their political rights.

Led by veterans back from the war against fascism, they paid their own transportation costs to testify in Jackson, the state capital, against Sen. Theodore G. Bilbo, admitted member of the Ku Klux Klan, who is accused of inciting white people to prevent Negroes from voting in the recent Democratic Primary.

They testified over and over again to acts of intimidation at polling places, to savage beatings administered in some cases by police officials, and to death threats designed to keep the primary "lily white."

They told the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee that since 1890 they have effectively been denied the right to participate in the only election that means anything in a state that has elected Democratic Congressmen year after year.

TESTIMONY brought out the fact that 66,972 war veterans from Mississippi had been discharged as of June 30, yet only 2,500 of them voted despite the fact that they have been exempted from polltax payments.

The witnesses, who jammed a little courtroom to overflowing, heard Bilbo accused of a radio speech in which he urged white people to "use any means" to prevent Negroes from voting.

Bilbo said he meant any "legal" means and added: "I meant that white people should advise and counsel with the Negroes the night before. That's what they did in Greenwood and everything worked out the way it should."

The way it "worked out" in other places where Bilbo's advice was taken in the literal Mississippi tradition was something else. From the many Negro witnesses came testimony that:

● Etoy Fletcher, 22, war veteran, tried to register for the Democratic Primary at Puckett. He was told he would not be allowed to vote. Leaving the courthouse, he was seized by four white men, who dumped him into a car, took him out of town, and beat him savagely with a 2½-foot-long car cable. He was warned that if he tried to vote, he would be killed.

● Richard E. Daniel, 125-pound war veteran, tried to vote at Gulfport. He was beaten by two white men in the corridor of the courthouse. Then Policeman Robert L. Williams, weighing 175 pounds, took him to a cell and "beat me up," Daniel testified. "He beat me around the ears with his fist and then he hit me at last in the stomach and I fell to the floor unconscious."

● Vernado Collier, president of the Gulfport branch of the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, testified that as he proceeded down a courthouse corridor to vote he was attacked by white men and knocked unconscious. A policeman standing by ignored the attack.

THE record of the Committee, headed by sympathetic-to-Bilbo Sen. Ellender (D., La.) was packed with other testimony of intimidation designed to keep Negroes from the polls if they valued their lives.

SEN. THEODORE G. BILBO
"They just 'advised' the Negroes not to vote"

At Greenwood, which Bilbo cited for "model" handling of the situation, 32 Negroes who had registered were warned that they had better not try to vote. They didn't.

The pattern, imposed on many Negro ministers among others, added up to this: "There might be violence and you'd be the cause of it."

The militancy of the Negro residents was surprising in view of the fact that Chairman Ellender denied them protection of subpoenas, which would have been their best alibis when they returned home to their mixed neighborhoods.

The hearing, which ended late this week was adjourned until Dec. 16, when the Committee will meet in Washington to consider its report.

Ellender, a champion of "white supremacy," predicted a unanimous report and indicated that he believed that the Committee would not recommend to the Senate the unseating of Bilbo despite the testimony demonstrating that his race-hate speeches had helped to incite white people to violence that kept Negroes from the polls.

PLEA FOR PUBLIC VOTE PROBE

A public hearing instead of a secret probe on election conditions in his N. Y. City district was demanded this week by Rep. Vito Marcantonio.

The Congressman was re-elected on the American Labor Party and Democratic tickets despite a heated campaign against him by most of the N. Y. City press.

This press, Marcantonio said, is now trying to smear him by tying his campaign up with the unsolved murder of a Republican election worker. Election conditions are being investigated by the House Committee on Campaign Expenditures.

Feature South On CIO Show

"What's In Store For The South?"

CIO will bring three people highly equipped to discuss this important subject, and its relationship to the needs of the rest of the country, before the America United microphone on Sunday, Dec. 15. The program is broadcast from 1-1:30 p.m. Sundays over the nationwide NBC network.

Speakers will be Gov. Ellis Arnall of Georgia, one of the south's great liberals; A. G. Mezerik, author of the thought-provoking book, "The Revolt of the South and West"; and Allen Swim, publicity director of the CIO Organizing Committee drive.

Beaten until he was unconscious because he tried to vote in the Democratic primary in Mississippi, Negro war veteran Richard E. Daniel exhibits blood-stained clothing to the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee at Jackson, Miss. Daniel weighs 125 pounds. His assailant, Policeman Robert L. Williams, weighs 176 pounds.

For 75c An Hour Minimum

LABOR PARLEY BACKS PROGRESSIVE LAWS

By FRED ROSS

WHILE Big Business aided by reactionary politicians and a sizable section of the press was whipping up a campaign for anti-union legislation, CIO and AFL state leaders and state labor officials this week expressed "complete opposition" to any attempts to weaken the U. S. labor movement.

This stand was taken in a resolution adopted by the thirteenth annual Labor Dept. conference on labor legislation, meeting in Washington.

The meeting also urged a 75c an hour minimum wage.

Following the conference, repsentatives of state CIO Councils held a three-day meeting at Natl. CIO headquarters to map out a campaign for fighting off the attacks on labor's basic rights.

The CIO conference also discussed community services, health, welfare and hospitals, workers and public education and public relations, and saw movies presented by the CIO Education & Research Dept., and considered the new council rules adopted by the CIO Convention.

EARLIER the Labor Dept. conference went "on record as expressing its complete opposition to any federal or state legislation which seeks in any way to weaken or undermine labor unions or deprive American workers of their right to organize into unions of their own choosing or to engage in any concerted activities.

"We condemn any effort to deprive American workers of rights and benefits now enjoyed under the Natl. Labor Relations Act and outstanding State Labor Relations Acts."

The same resolution, which was introduced by Pres. Charles C. Webber of the Virginia CIO Council, also recommended "improvement of the Minimum Wage Law, establishment of a permanent FEPC, elimination of the poltax, equal pay for men and women, improvement of social security, and an effective civil rights law that will protect the exercise of civil rights for all Americans."

A move by Ben Huiet, Georgia labor commissioner, to insist that the white supremacy theory be applied to state employment practices brought condemnation of delegates from other states, including labor leaders from Virgiina, Missouri, Alabama and Kentucky.

The heated discussion came after a committee had recommended that state referral standards provide no discrimination because of sex, creed or color. Huiet moved deletion of the paragraph, asserting:

"It won't work in Georgia and it would not work in Louisana or Arkansas."

Several speakers immediately assailed him, and one southern labor delegate declared:

"When those Negro soldiers from the south were fighting the enemy a year or more ago, those bullets didn't do any discriminating."

Although, Jim Crow practices in the USES were overwhelmingly condemned by the conference, the return of USES to the states means that racial bias will continue to flourish where governors permit.

THE conference gave its approval to a host of resolutions, including one providing for the immediate raising of the legal minimum wage to 75c an hour with an escalator clause that would provide for an appropriate higher rate. The resolution stated:

"Even in this period of general prosperity and high employment, there are still many thousands of workers who labor under sub-standard conditions and at low wages. It is therefore still necessary for appropriate agencies of government to fix a minimum wage."

The delegates called for the repeal of the Smith-Connally Act, reaffirming the position taken by three previous conferences.

"The resolution on the Smith-Connally Act pointed out that "both labor and management have recognized the advantages of free collective bargaining," but that the act denies "labor many of the rights granted both in previous legislation and in the Constitution of this country."

The resolution pointed out that the act denied "to the peoples of this country their right to know all the facts in labor disputes cases by prohibiting the publication and distribution of all facts in such cases."

Limitation of the Federal government's efforts to end labor disputes to voluntary mediation and conciliation was urged in another resolution, which also asserted that "the Federal government should avoid any attempt to revise the Natl. Labor Relations Act through any system of compulsory arbitration or labor courts."

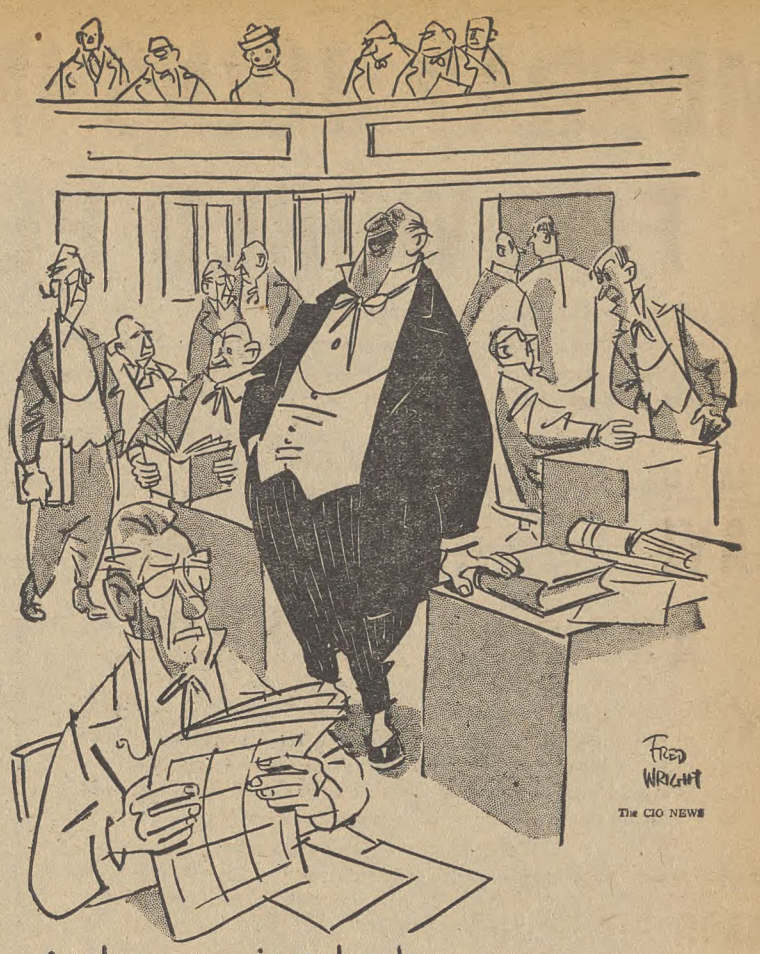
In accord with its desire to encourage peaceful settlement of disputes, the conference pointed out that the NLRB does not have enough personnel to do its job and requested Congress to grant the NLRB sufficient funds to administer properly the Wagner Act.

The $200-a-month ceiling on veterans taking on-the-job training was attacked in a resolution which called for legislation "to restore benefits approaching the journeymen's wage rate" to ex-servicemen.

The community of interests of farm and industrial labor was underscored in conference action which attacked the exemption of agriculture from labor and related laws.

Another resolution declared that "the role of the unions in labor education is the training of union members in a sense of loyalty to the labor movement, and their responsibility to the government and the community."

The group recommended the appropriation for the labor education service "be increased to not less than $100,000 for 1947-48 to meet the demands being made by workers for the services of the Labor Dept. in this field."



NAME CIVIL RIGHTS BODY

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of CIO last week was named as a member of President Truman's new 15-man President's Committee on Civil Rights. The group is charged with recommending legislation or other means of strengthening the government's handling of racial discrimination and mob violence cases.

Head of the committee is Pres. Charles E. Wilson of the General Electric Co.

"The preservation of civil liberties is a duty of every government—state, federal and local," the President declared in announcing the commission.

"Wherever the law enforcement measures and authority of federal, state and local governments are inadequate to discharge this primary function of government, these measures and this authority should be strengthened and improved.

Other members of the committee are Mrs. Sadie T. Alexander, assistant city solicitor of Philadelphia; John S. Dickey, head of Dartmouth College; Morris Ernst, New York civil liberties attorney; Rabbi Roland G. Gittelsohn of New York; Pres. Frank Graham of the Univ. of North Carolina; the Most Rev. Francis Haas of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Charles Luckman, head of Lever Bros. soap company; Francis P. Matthews, former head of the Knights of Columbus; Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr.; the Right Rev. Henry Sherrill, presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church; Boris Shishkin, AFL economist; Mrs. M. E. Tilley, Methodist Church social welfare expert, Atlanta, Ga.; and Channing H. Tobias of New York.

CIO STRENGTHENS ANTI-BIAS GROUP

EXPANSION of the Natl. CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination to include two new members was announced this week by James B. Carey, committee chairman and CIO secretary-treasurer.

The two new committee members are W. Richard Carter, member of the general executive board of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, and Philip Weightman, first vice-president of the Packinghouse Workers.

The new members were named by Pres. Philip Murray at the Executive Board meeting following the recent CIO Convention.

"This is an important step towards strengthening the Committee," Carey said in making the announcement. "Carter and Weightman represent CIO Unions with large Negro membership. They have demonstrated their leadership by the effective work they have done within their respective organizations."

IN his report to the Convention, George L-P Weaver, the committee's director, recommended that each International Union organize its own anti-discrimination committee "composed of Executice Board members or elected officers of the International, with adequate personnel."

To date, eight of the Unions have created this type of committee structure and many more have designated officers or members of the staff to handle racial problems. A total of 100 Council and International Union Committees are functioning within CIO, working on the various problems facing minority group workers, Weaver said.

Weaver conceded that "we have not yet created the perfect mechanism, nor solved the problem. The problem of minorities in America is the problem of the Negro, the Jew, the Catholic, the Prostestant. It is the problem of all the people who have bought freedom at inflation prices—with the lives of over 250,000 Americans.

"It is the problem of 130,000,000 people who have fought and produced together, and who must learn to live in peace and respect for each other, if the victory in battle is to become a truly people's victory."

BROPHY RULING ON NEGRO GROUP

In one of the first interpretations of new rules governing CIO Councils, John Brophy, councils director, notified all CIO city and state groups that the "national office of the CIO has never endorsed the Natl. Negro Congress and that our councils should not engage in membership solicitation, fund raising or other activities in support of this organization."

The statement was made in connection with a letter addressed to the Los Angeles CIO, in which Brophy wrote that he had been advised by the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination that the Negro Congress' "stated program and activities" duplicate those of the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. He added that he had been advised that Negro Congress policies have "from time to time" been "at variance with and in opposition to" those of CIO.

The councils director accordingly called on the Los Angeles council to cease fund raising, membership solicitation and other work in support of the Negro Congress.

MURRAY JOINS IN PLEA FOR WORLD PEACE

HEADS of the Big Three powers — Pres. Truman, Premier Stalin and Prime Minister Attlee—last week received from a group of leading Americans a plea to hasten the course of world disarmament.

"An international law to make aggressive war an international crime is a great step forward," the letter declared. "But you can go all the way. Instead of waiting to punish international crime, you can prevent it."

Signers of the statement included CIO Pres. Murray and Sec.-Treas. Carey; Pres. William Green of the AFL; Karl T. Compton, head of Massachusetts Tech and a leading expert on atomic matters; Senators Harley Kilgore of West Virginia, and Glenn Taylor of Idaho, and Elbert Thomas of Utah; Dr. Mary Woolley, former head of Mount Holyoke College; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, former Minister to Norway; and many others.

Disarmanent on a world-wide basis, their statement said, would permit all forms of social and economic organization — "communism, socialism, democracy, monarchies, empires—all could advance on their merits without fear of force behind them."

IN praising the Big Three leaders for supporting disarmament proposals, the statement called for "practical measures to carry them out." The plea to the Big Three listed five essentials for "atomic peace and disarmament":

1. The United Nations charter which makes immediately available forces to act in emergency situations.

2. Formation of an international organization that "will secure peaceful settlement of any dispute whatever that may rise between nations."

3. The fact that all UN members have declared themselves in favor of "inspection" of armament facilities and "safeguards against violations and evasions."

4. Pres. Truman's call for making aggressive war an international crime and Premier Stalin's demand that violations of disarmament agreements should be considered as a "grave offense against the state."

5. Soviet recommendations for the creation of an Intl. Control Commission.

SAYS LABOR WILL ACT AGAINST FRANCO

WORLD labor will act against the Franco dictatorship in Spain if the United Nations sidesteps a forthright policy against the Spanish friend of Mussolini and Hitler, the UN was warned last week by Leon Jouhaux.

Jouhaux, a leading figure in the French union organization and vice president of the World Federation of Trade Unions, is also a member of the French delegation to UN.

The French labor leader, himself a veteran of Hitler's prisons, directed his fire against the U. S. proposals on the Franco problem, as outlined to the UN by Sen. Tom Connally of Texas.

The American program, carefully omitting any plan for severance of commercial or diplomatic relations with the Spanish fascist government, merely called on Franco to resign to a republican coalition government. It also would call upon the Spanish people to overthrow the dictator.

Resolutions for stronger action against Spain have been proposed by France and the Soviet Union, and are now being considered by the UN political and security committee.

In Detroit, meanwhile, Pres. Walter Reuther of the UAW-CIO wired Pres. Truman and Sec. of State Byrnes "urgently requesting" that the U. S. delegation get behind the proposals for breaking relations with Franco.

Reuther cited the record as showing "indisputably" that the economic strength of the democratic world—and particularly that of the United States—is preserving Franco's political power. A break, he added, is "dictated by the lesson of the recent bloody war against fascism."

LABOR PRESS HIT; PAPER COST SOARS

Marty Berg, chairman of the Newsprint Consumers' Emergency Committee, this week telegraphed President Truman to re-establish consumption quotas and price controls on newsprint.

Berg, who is editor and publisher of Sports-Week, charged that approximately 200 daily newspapers in the U. S. consume 85% of the available newsprint, and that the remaining 15% is distributed in a "wraithlike spray" among more than 17,000 daily and weekly community, fraternal, foreign language, labor, religious, trade, veterans and specialized newsprint consumers.

A number of CIO papers, including The CIO News, belong to the committee.

Berg said that "these 200 newspapers daily wax fatter and fatter from their increasing consumption of newsprint." Meanwhile, the committee chairman said, "the more than 17,000 (papers), which suffered from voluntary pernicious anemia during the wartime restriction period as a war measure and to further the war effort, now are being sped to death and paupers' graves by the insatiable greed of the already overswollen 200.

WORLD LABOR

FRANK ROSENBLUM, vice president of CIO and secretary of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, left for Paris late last week to attend the quarterly Executive Bureau meeting of the World Federation of Trade Unions. The CIO official is a vice president of the global labor organization.

Accompanying Rosenblum were Michael Ross, director of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept., and John Abt, counsel for the clothing workers.

ANTI-LABOR legislation passed by the 79th Congress is beginning to cause reverberations outside the U. S.

At the instigation of Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.), Congress passed riders to several appropriations bills forbidding government employment of persons belonging to unions which maintain the right to strike against the federal government. The bill was aimed primarily at the CIO United Public Workers.

Now reactions to the Ball riders have popped up, in vociferous form, at Rome, Italy. Allied Labor News reports that efforts by the U. S. Army to force its thousands of Italian civilian employes to sign the pledge have brought heated protests from the Italian Confederation of Labor (CGIL).

The Federation refuses to accept the principle that strikes against a government are illegal, particularly because a large section of its membership is employed by the Italian government on nationally - owned railroads, telegraph and telephone lines and other major industries.

Italian labor leaders fear that if signing of the Ball rider pledges is accomplished, reactionaries in Italy will seek laws to outlaw strikes against the Italian government enterprises as well. U. S. Army authorities have agreed to take the matter up with the War Dept.

A BILL to place all railways, road transport, waterways, docks and harbors under the ownership and management of the British government has just been introduced in the House of Commons by the Labor Party. In view of the party's heavy parliamentary majority, the measure is almost certain of passage.

The industries affected by the labor proposal employ over a million workers. Compensation for the canal and railway firms alone will cost the government some four billion dollars.

Control of the nationalized transport system will lie in the hands of a government-appointed commission. British unions have been seeking direct representation on the directing bodies of all the big nationalized industries, and their demands are likely to be met.

CIO UNION HEADS MEET BEVIN: Talk of trade union problems dominated the conversation when CIO officials lunched with Ernest Bevin in N. Y. City. Now British Foreign Minister, Bevin was formerly secretary of the Transport & General Workers Union. Shown around the luncheon table are: CIO Vice-Presidents Curran, Green and Rieve; two British staff officials; Pres. Murray; Bevin; Sec. Treas. Carey; Vice-Pres. Haywood; Sec.-Treas. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers; Archibald Gordon, labor attache of the British Embassy in Washington; CIO General Counsel Pressman, and Vice-Pres. Rosenblum.

Standing by the peo

BILL of Rights Day comes December 15. This important Constitutional declaration of human freedom is 157 years old.

To the money-fat monopolists and their lieutenants in the legislatures, the Bill of Rights is a target for backhanded knife thrusts.

But to the working man, the Bill of Rights is 157 years young and is a growing, living document to be guarded and strengthened.

Back in the days after the American Revolution, a struggle by the workers and farmers forced the first Constitutional Congress to draft the first ten amendments—the Bill of Rights. Today the same struggle continues to maintain and extend those rights.

The historian who has studied the record of American life after the revolution will tell you that the newly united American people—the little people—turned many a blunt phrase of disapproval when the Constitution was first presented to them for consideration.

"It doesn't protect against an evil government," was the gist of the little people's dissatisfaction. They had just finished fighting a long war against a repressive monarchy and they wanted no more repression. They wanted a declaration of their rights, in black and white for everyone to understand. So in each of the 13 states, delegates of the people spoke up.

BUT the new-born country was shaky. It had no finances and no government to collect the money it needed. A constitution was necessary to establish a national government to lead the reconstruction of the nation.

To throw out the drafted constitution would leave the people and the nation waiting for months before a new constitution could be discussed and presented. To vote in the proposed constitution would leave the people and their rights out in the cold, their struggle for liberty a mockery.

So the delegates in six of the states compromised. They approved the Constitution but they petitioned for amendments to the nation's new charter.

Virginia's delegates recognized that "political motives" had formulated the constitution. They meant that the Constitution was in itself a compromise between the revolutionary leaders who believed the people and their rights came first and those who believed property and money came first.

Tom Paine, the people's revolutionary pamphleteer, took the side of the people. "Property alone cannot defend a country against invading enemies," he wrote. "Houses and lands cannot fight; sheep and oxen cannot be taught the musket; therefore the defense must be personal, and that which equally unites all must be something equally the property of all: one equal share of freedom, independent of the varieties of wealth, and which wealth, or the want of it, can neither give nor take away."

THE property holders, however, had other ideas. They wanted to run the government. They didn't want the people to do it and they didn't care to guarantee individual freedom. So they proposed a monarchy, then backtracked to an aristocracy of property holders. Failing in that idea, they compromised for the elaborate system of checks and balances in our present government.

The Virginia Assembly, in asking for the amendments, said: "Since concessions have been made from political motives which we conceive may endanger the republic, we trust that a commendable zeal will be shown for obtaining those provisions which experience has taught us are necessary to secure from danger the unalienable rights of human nature."

Massachusetts passed the Constitution and proposed amendments preventing Congress from making "regulations subversive to the rights of the people."

New York's assembly of delegates approved the Constitution with the understanding "that the powers of government may be reassumed by the people whensoever it shall become necessary to their happiness."

Rhode Island stamped its okay with reservations: "The people have a right peaceably to assemble together to consult for their common good, or to instruct their representatives, and . . . to petition or apply to the legislature for redress of grievances."

New Hampshire said the Constitution was all rights as far as it went but suggested amendments protecting the people against oppressive taxes and criminal laws and guaranteeing their free religious choice.

So the Constitution became law in 1789. The First Congress began drawing up the amendments soon after convening in New York's drafty City Hall. They debated, just as they debate in Washington's lofty Capitol today.

IF there had been a Federated Press at the time, the news story of an important debate in June 1789 would probably have read like this:

New York, June 7, 1789, (FP)—A proposal intended to grant the people the right "to instruct their representatives" was defeated in the House of Representatives today by a 41 to 10 vote.

If passed the proposal would have been added to the amendments of the Bill of Rights now being drawn by the representatives.

Advocating the passage of the proposal, Rep. Gerry of Massachusetts clashed with Rep. James Madison of Virginia in the sharpest debate seen thus far in the two-month old Congress.

Gerry said "if the people have the right of instructing their representatives, why not declare it? . . . I hope we shall never shut our ears against that information which is to be derived from the petitions and instructions of our constituents. I hope we shall never presume to think that all the wisdom of this country is concentrated within the walls of this House."

Madison jumped to his feet and declared: "My idea of the sovereignty of the people is, that the people can change the constitution if they please; but while the constitution exists, they must conform to its dictates."

Rep. Stone of Maryland, opposing the proposal, concluded: ". . . the government would be altered from a representative one to a democracy wherein all laws are made immediately by the voice of the people . . . Why then, are we called upon to propose amendments subversive of the principles of the constitution, which were never desired?"

Gerry asked for the floor once more and in rebuttal said: ". . . the proposition is only intended to open for them [the people] a convenient mode in which they may convey their sense to their agents." Madison "says the people have a right to alter the constitution, but they have no right to oppose the government. If, while the government exists, they have no right to control it, it appears they have divested themselves of the sovereignty over the constitution. Therefore, our language, with our principles, must change and we ought to say that the sovereignty existed in the people previous to the establishment of this government."

THE proposed amendments offered by the states were combined and compressed, and then sent back to the states for ratification. More debate followed in the state assemblies. Finally, on December 15, 1791, the last state approved them and the amendments were added to the constitution as a permanent guarantee of the rights of free Americans.

Now the American people had a Bill of Rights. Its first proposition was "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Congress, in the 157 years since that proposition was first declared, hasn't broken the people's bill. The Supreme Court has prevented it. But the property owners who didn't believe in it in the first place have, by every means at their command sought to destroy the civil rights and liberties guaranteed by the bill.

Ever since working people began to organize, the property holders have used threats, intimidation, police, thugs and the lower courts to prevent the guarantees of the bill. They took the law into their own hands. But the Supreme Court has, in the main, put the law back into the frame of the Bill of Rights. In fact, a Supreme Court that honestly interprets the Constitution is the only guarantee that the people's rights will be maintained.

Today, the same attempts against the Bill of Rights are being made. In Longview, Texas, CIO organizers were arrested for violating a "law" proclaiming th to "interfere with anyo work." City police arres organizer, and placed an him. The CIO sent another was arrested. A third, a went in. They were all a under excessive bond. An town will cover the five.

BILL of RIGHTS

From the U. S. Constitution

CONGRESS shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

THE right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime unless on a presentment of indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

IN ALL criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which districts shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

UAW OPENS BATTLE ON FOUNDRY INJUSTICES

R. J. THOMAS, CIO Auto Workers' vice president and competitive shop department director, this week urged the formation of a national UAW Wage and Hour Foundry Council to "wipe out the miserably inadequate health and safety standards, low wage scales, and dangerous wage differentials" in the foundry industry.

Action will be taken by more than 200 delegates at a National UAW Foundry Conference in Milwaukee this week to form a Wage and Hour Council and to decide on a new wage program. Thomas said:

"Topmost on the agenda of the conference must be the question of wages. Characteristic of the whole foundry industry is the foundry of the Dodge plant in Detroit. Three, plant-wide average hourly rates have increased by no more than 31.2% since 1941, from 97.9c an hour to $1.284 an hour.

"This is far less than the nearly 65% cost of living increase established by the CIO since that time, and less even than the grossly understated 49.7% increase in living costs that the Bureau of Labor Statistics admits took place from 1941 to September 1946.

"Since the end of price ceilings on June 30, the cost of living has increased by no less than 12.7%. And foundry workers have received not one red cent in wage increases to compensate for the increase in living costs."

"Foundry workers are forced to perform the dirtiest, filthiest work in the automobile industry under the most hazardous and dangerous of conditions. Iron and steel foundries have for years stood near the top of the list of industries having the highest accident rates."

ACQUIT 14 UE MEMBERS OF RIOTING CHARGES

SHOCKED by revelations of police brutality, a jury of small shopkeepers and housewives in Philadelphia this week found 14 union men not guilty of charges of rioting, inciting to riot and unlawful assembly during a strike against the General Electric Co. last February.

The men, members of CIO Electrical Radio & Machine Workers were indicted as the result of clashes that occurred when mounted and motocycle police tried to break up a peaceful parade by UE members after the courts had granted an injunction against mass picketing near the GE plant.

As the parade followed its line of march, which led past the plant, police charged with swing-clubs and a general fight ensued.

Sixteen men were arrested but charges against two were dropped earlier for lack of evidence. The jury, composed of eight women and four men including four Negroes, debated their verdict less than two hours before clearing the remainder.

One juror, a woman, remarked after the trial that members of the jury had been horrified at the evidence of police brutality and were determined not to let the men be sent to jail.

WIN PAY BOOST, MORE IN SIGHT

THE 520 members of the CIO Newspaper Guild went back to work this week on the Los Angeles Herald-Express with wage increases averaging 14%, and the expectation of further wage increases through continued negotiations.

Under the settlement, negotiations will continue for 60 days, and if no agreement is reached the Guild has an additional 30 days to submit the dispute to arbitration.

Locked out by the Hearst management Sept. 3 after negotiations broke down, the Guildsmen returned to work with benefits which included a night differential, an additional holiday, three weeks' vacation after five years, and an increased allowance for use of autos. They were also paid for a week which they did not work.

The agreement was reached Nov. 11, but the end of the lockout was delayed by the failure of the management to meet the demands of the AFL printing craft unions, and the CIO News Vendors, who called for retroactive pay during the lockout.

The News Vendors received $30,000 to be divided among them with an additional payment of more than $11,000 to be paid certain newsstand dealers.

CHINA USING FINKS IN FACTORIES

Secret police agents and finks are being placed on the payrolls of Shanghai factories at the direct order of the Kuomintang intelligence service, it was reported last week by Allied Labor News.

The news service charged that industrialists are being told that every shop must have at least one labor spy, and in "dangerous plants" where unions are strong, the proposition of finks to workers may run as high as one to ten.

ORGANIZING DRIVE

Plans for a large scale organizing drive among approximately 75,000 unorganized workers in non-profit and social service organizations in N. Y. City will be drawn up by the Tenth Anniversary Convention of the Social Service Eployes' Union, Local 19, CIO Office and Professional Workers of America this weekend in N. Y. City.

RHODE ISLAND FOR PRIMARY

The Rhode Island CIO Council at its convention at Providence last week-end approved its officers' report which characterized three State bills as legislative "musts." They are the measures for the direct primary, a State FEPC and a 65c minimum wage.

Rhode Island is one of the handful of states in which there is no direct primary, and the CIO working with other progressive organizations is hopeful of enacting the measure to abolish the convention system of choosing part candidates.

At the last session of the state legislature, the direct primary bill passed the House, but was bottled up in a Senate committee.

Speakers included CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Assistant CIO-IUC Director Anthony Wayne Smith, Gov. John O. Pastore; Congressmen Foran and Fogarty.

The convention was attended by 550 delegates who reelected Frank J. Benti, Textile Workers, president; Albert Clifton, Textile Workers, vice president, and Anthony DiPinto, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, secretary-treasurer.

ORGANIZING KY. THEME

Pointing to the post-war growth of the clothing, textile, shoe and steel fabricating industries in the State, IUC Director John Brophy stressed the importance of cooperating with the CIO Organizing Committee, at the convention of Kentucky IUC at Louisville last weekend.

Continued organizing of the unorganized to maintain and improve living standards was also the theme of CIO Regional Director Robert J. Davidson, Cincinnati, and Delmond Garst, assistant to CIO Director of Organization and Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

Al Whitehouse was reelected president, and three new vice presidents were elected, Zephny Osburn, Oil Workers; Frank Guerra, Office & Professional Workers, and John E. Meeks, Brewery Workers.

The more than a hundred delegates to the convention called for enactment of the 65-75c minimum wage bill and the Murray-Wagner-Dingel bill, strengthening of the NLRB through a greater appropriation, recommended the adoption of the guaranteed annual wage throughout industry and urged the repeal of the Smith-Connally Act.

Increased wages to meet the ever-raising costs of living was urged in a resolution.

BACK FIREMEN'S, POLICE DEMANDS

Full support for the request by the Joint Committee of Police and Firemen for wage adjustments to meet increased living costs for the city's 26,000 policemen and firemen was expressed this week in a telegram to Mayor William O'Dwyer from Saul Mills, secretary of the Greater New York CIO Council.

Mills said the CIO Council would cooperate with the Joint Committee in distribution of literature to CIO's 600,000 members in the city and to the public explaining the need for wage increases for the city's police and firemen.

The 1200 men and women employed by the huge Thomasville Chair Co. in Thomasville, N. C. are returning to their jobs with the settlement of the four month strike conducted by the CIO Furniture Workers. In one of the largest and longest strikes conducted in the Southern furniture industry, the union finally brought the walkout to a successful close with a general wage increase of 15%, no one to receive less than 10c an hour more; a 10c boost in the minimum rate; and one and two weeks paid vacation, union recognition and check-off.

In addition to the assistance given the Thomasville workers by the International Union and its locals, the strikers received the support of the community, the CIO, its international unions and locals, AFL unions and many individuals throughout the country.

OPEN DRIVE TO ORGANIZE AIRLINE SERVICE WORKERS

A DRIVE to organize the nation's 15,000 airline service employes into the CIO United Transport Service Employes was announced this week by Pres. Willard S. Townsend, president of the union.

Townsend also announced that Vice Pres. Eugene E. Frazier has been placed in charge of the drive. For the past three months preliminary investigations and surveys have been conducted by the union to determine general conditions and the extent of organization among this group of airline workers.

Townsend charged "the new airline service workers is being unwittingly used as the cat's paw between the demand for generous and efficient service by the air-minded public and the need for economy operation of mass air transportation by the airlines."

"Modern airports," Townsend continued, "must avoid the old errors of railroad stations in determining the nature and type of service to be rendered by the employe in this connection."

Members of the Philadelphia-Camden Newspaper Guild publicity committee are working on the Guild Striker, which keeps the strikers informed of developments. The Committee .tgrew strike headquarters and is working in the first floor of a striker's home. The committee also issues press releases to keep the public informed of its battle with the Philadelphia Record, and the Camden Courier and Post.

Mike Devitt, striking Philadelphia Record sportswriter, shows how to do two things at once. Devitt is not only picketing the Record, but is writing a story for the daily Guild Striker, issued by the CIO Newspaper Guild of Philadelphia and Camden. The Guild is striking two other papers published by J. David Stern—the Camden Courier and Post.

'THE DAMNDEST STRIKE YOU EVER HEARD OF'

A CIO white collar union is on strike in Philadelphia and Camden, N. J. It's the damndest strike you ever heard of.

Only 580 men and women are out. But with solid CIO support and some really fancy footwork, they're throwing their weight around like 580,000.

They've been out since Nov. 7—nearly a month now—and they face a pretty empty Christmas. But with a spirit of unionism that has won the admiration of all organized labor, they're hitting harder each day.

They are the CIO-American Newspaper Guild employes of J. David Stern, the self-styled "liberal" publisher who rode to fame and fortune on the coat-tails of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Stern poses as a "friend of labor."

THE Guild struck because it felt Stern had declined to bargain in good faith. In nine weeks of negotiations, he rejected Guild demands and made one take-it-or-leave-it offer on pay, the same offer which Philadelphia Inquirer Guildsmen had turned down.

With a strike set for Oct. 31, when the old "contract" expired, Michael S. Harris, president of the Philadelphia CIO Council and regional director of the CIO Steelworkers, asked the Guild to postpone its walkout for a week in the hope of reaching an agreement with direct CIO assistance.

But though the Guild offered 41 compromises during that week, Stern wouldn't budge. His attitude confirmed the Guild's conviction that Stern was determined to weaken or break the Guild. Harris was equally convinced. So the strike began Nov. 7.

With a handful of executives and some non-Guild advertising and promotion men pulled in as strike-breakers, Stern continued publication of all three struck papers. The AFL mechanical employes kept working.

Stern made it immediately clear he no longer was a "friend of labor."

IN Camden where he controlled the Democratic city administration, he ordered out two-thirds of the city's police force to "protect" his property from 140-odd white collar strikers—and break the strike by arresting pickets and strikers distributing handbills.

But it didn't work. When John J. Fabian, president of the South Jersey CIO Council, saw what Stern's Gestapo was trying to do to the Guild and all organized labor, he sponsored a sympathy holiday of all CIO workers in Camden. Upwards of 25,000 swarmed to the picket lines and on Nov. 22 halted distribution of all editions of the Evening Courier.

Then Stern accepted an offer to discuss negotiations in the office of Camden's Mayor George E. Brunner. He laid down this ultimatum: He would resume negotiations only on the basis that no contract with the Guild had ever existed. He inferred the Guild would have to fight again for every gain it had won in 12 years of contract relations.

HARRIS said neither Tom Girdler nor Eugene Grace had ever tried anything like that. The Guild, still willing to resume talks at the point they had reached when the strike began, had to say "no."

Though he doesn't control the Republican city administration in Philadelphia, Stern calls for—and gets—extra cops whenever a couple of pickets hiss a strike-breaker. Sometimes there'll be a dozen cops to half a dozen pickets.

The Guild has stationed most of the strikers at the big newsstands, where their picketing has knocked hell out of Stern's sales. Already Record circulation has been cut upwards of 25%, Courier-Post circulation upwards of 35%.

Advertising—the heart of publishing profits—is beginning to feel Guild pressure, too. For, instance, with Christmas so near this is ordinarily the big advertising season. But the Sunday Record, instead of getting fatter, is getting thinner.

And to point up this phase of the campaign, the Philadelphia office of Stern's national advertising representative is being picketed. The Guild learned it was being used as a clearing house for local advertising, too. That's strike-breaking.

THE Guild tried to answer a full-page Stern ad in the big Evening Bulletin and morning Inquirer. But day after day, neither of these papers could find space for the Guild's ad. Nor could the Philadelphia radio stations find time for the Guild's story.

So the strikers had to take their story to the people on the street corners, in subway and trolley cars, in meetings, at public events and in the genuinely liberal press.

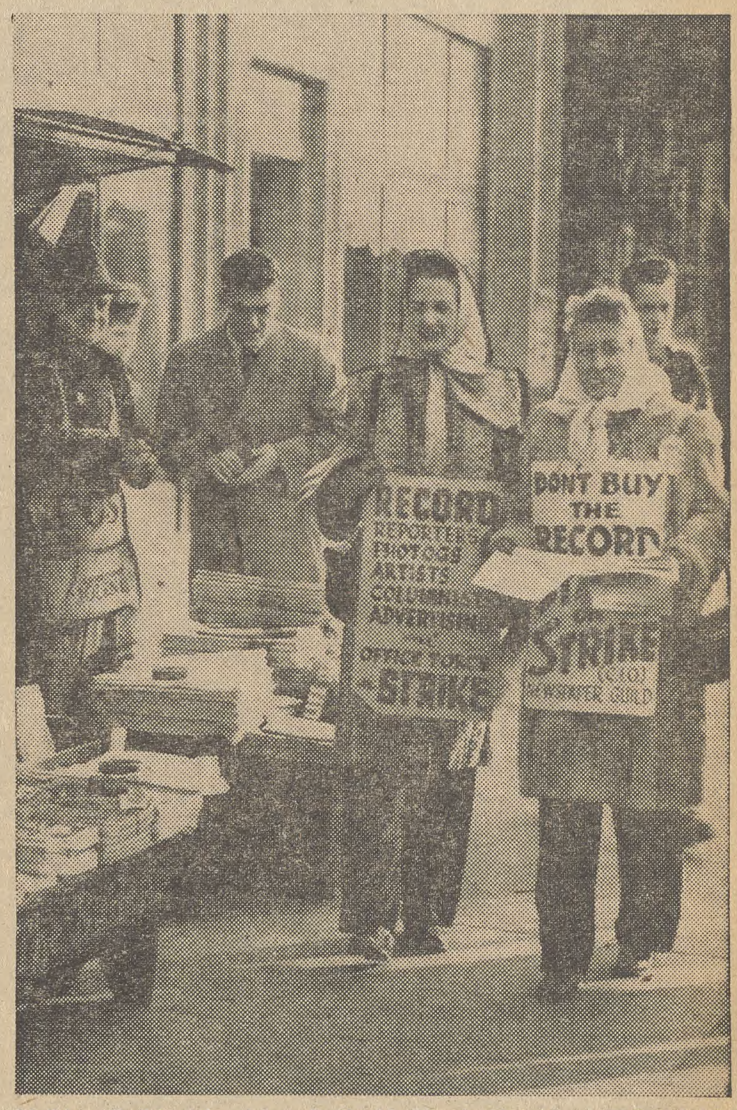
Sports writers in sound trucks tell big sports crowds—ranging from 103,000 to 200,000—why they aren't writing in the Record and Courier-Post any more. The trucks, furnished by locals of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and Transport Workers, also spread the Guild story in every section of the two cities daily.

More than 500,000 handbills and pamphlets have been distributed. Thousands of letters are going out to people in every walk of life. Telephone crews are kept busy. "Don't Buy" buttons and stickers are given out by the thousands.

In addition to the support of the South Jersey IUC, the Philadelphia CIO Council and the National CIO at its Atlantic City Convention have put the Record on their unfair list and are throwing increasing support to the Guild. TWU loans its mimeograph equipment for the publication of a daily Guild newspaper. The Food & Tobacco Workers in Camden have loaned their hall for strike headquarters. The Shipbuilding Workers and other CIO unions in Camden provide pickets daily.

Money, food or other effective forms of support come from practically every CIO local in the Philadelphia-Camden area. Fellow newspapermen from over the nation pour in money and encouragement.

This white-collar union is out to win its strike.



Striking Guild girls picket J. David Stern's Record at Philadelphia newstands. In a city-wide campaign, the Guild has slashed sales of the struck paper and cut total circulation by upwards of 25%. The strikers wear placards, distribute handbills and deliver convincing talks to prospective Record readers.

STAGE FOR ACTION STARS SING SONG FOR THE PEOPLE

Laura Duncan brought down the house at the CIO convention with her song, "I've Got a Right," a moving plea for fair treatment for Negroes. Pete Seeger and his banjo led the delegates in singing such union songs as "Solidarity Forever" and "I'm Talking Union." Both performers are with Stage for Action, a non-profit social theater which puts on shows at union meetings and on picketlines. Bookings may be arranged by writing to Exec. Director Alex Leith, Stage for Action, 130 N. 42nd St., N. Y. 3 N. Y.

A WORKER'S CAPITAL IS HIS HEALTH

A New Health Column with a Union Slant
(Federated Press)

IT has been wisely said that the worker's health is his only capital. Stop and think about it for a minute. Let it sink in and you will realize how tragically true this is. No matter how skilled you may be, or how much experience you may have at your trade—if you're unable to work because of sickness you are on the rocks sooner or later. If you're on your back long enough, your family accepts charity—or else they starve.

What's the moral of all this? It's very simple. People who work for a living must guard their health as their most precious possession. They must learn the best ways of preserving it. They must also know exactly how to go about getting cured, once they have lost it. That's the reason for this column.

It is true, certainly, that underneath this entire matter of good health is the need for a decent income. The employer class doesn't have nearly so much illness as wage earners, or even people in the middle income group. When they do get sick they get more and better medical care. That's another reason why it is important to fight for wage increases, particularly in days like these when "a dollar ain't a dollar anymore."

Still, there's a whale of a lot that can be done to promote workers' health while the wage increases are being negotiated. We believe that a health column like this one can help. Here are some of the angles you will see discussed here which you probably cannot read in other health columns.

THE basic thing, of course, is the approach to the question: What is health? Is it simply the absence of disease, or is it something more? What are the factors which may rob a worker of his health? What part is played by substandard housing, an inadequate diet, the threat of unemployment, lack of recreational opportunities, a shop foreman whose guts you hate? What goes on when you are told by a whole string of doctors, some of them high-priced specialists, that there is nothing really wrong with you, and yet you continue to have headaches or low-back pain?

Another thing is the emphasis placed on certain diseases. Why do today's doctors have to concern themselves with cancer, heart disease and diabetes, while those of a couple of generations back were busy treating diphtheria, dysentery and typhoid fever? It is smart for us, as a nation, to spend so much money and create such a ballyhoo about infantile paralysis, while the real crippler and killer of little children and adults too, rheumatic fever, goes practically unnoticed?

A subject which will come up again and again is health security, since the highest barrier which stands between the American people and adequate medical care is the dollar sign. Why do the vested interests of the organized medical profession, the trustees of the American Medical Association, fight national health insurance so viciously? Why does their chief financial support come from the million dollar drug companies, the makers of patent medicines? What can unions do on their own to win health security through collective bargaining, while continuing to fight for legislation?

Two New Books

SOUTHERNERS EXAMINE DIXIE

By Hollace Ransdell

TWO new books dealing with the South—"Southern Exposure" and "Dew on Jordan"—both written not by damnyankees but by Southerners, throw light from different directions on the basic point stressed by the CIO in its Southern Organizing Drive.

This is the great need for strong democratic unions to help the southland's industrial and agricultural workers raise their social and economic status. For it is the low wage system of the South that bears most of the responsibility for the poverty, ignorance, poor health, low educational standards, racial prejudice and other evils that hold back this region of America.

In "Southern Exposure", Stetson Kennedy, a member of the CIO American Newspaper Guild's Atlanta chapter, who has lived all the 30 years of his life in the South, gathers together an alarming array of facts and figures on all economic and social ills of this region.

Kennedy is known in union circles for two documentary pieces he did on the anti-union activities of the "Christian Americans", 150,000 copies of which are distributed by unions, and on the labor-hating sheet called "Militant Truth", distributed by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

Kennedy's book emphasis the point that the unionization of the South's industrial workers must go hand in hand with the region's industrial progress. "Industry in the South must be made to live up to its full responsibility to its employes and to the public," he writes.

"The only way to accomplish this is through economic and political action, and the only type of organization in a position to do this is the democratic labor union."

On the race problem, Kennedy insists that the "emancipation of Negroes from second-class citizenship" can no longer be postponed. He discounts the "bogey of Black Rule" which horrifies some white Southerners, maintaining that "all the Southern Negro asks is a proportionate opportunity to share the responsibilities and benefits of a working democracy in the South."

As a source book on all the fascist-minded individuals and groups busy in the South with hate campaigns against unions, liberals and Negroes, "Southern Exposure" seems to be complete. Also told in full is the story of the all-out 1944 drive to get rid of "That Man" in the White House, together with the names and contributions of industrial notables who supported it.

In spite of the portrayal of the poverty, prejudice, poor health, poor education, poll tax, white primary and other handicaps to the progress of the South, Kennedy is hopeful for the future, and devotes the last section of his book to solutions which will enable the South to "take the highroad to democracy—political, economic and racial" and to proceed "full speed ahead to the promised land of liberty and justice for all."

* * *

THE second book, "Dew on Jordan" by Harold Preece and Celia Kraft, tells with sympathy and understanding the story of the 200-odd small religious sects and cults which flourish in the South and elsewhere, to a lesser extent.

The authors are a young couple, both born in the South, who gathered the material for their book at first-hand study, by living among the hill people of the South, attending services and talking with various believers.

Their vivid inside stories describing orgies of the snake cults where amidst the groans and shouts of the congregation, people start crawling on their bellies toward the pulpit, crying, "Oh Lord, here I come low-down an' mean like a snake;" the ceremonies in preparation for the end of the world, and other weird rites, excite horror, pity and amazement that such things are actually going on in this highly civilized country.

Not all the little sects described, however, are of this kind. Some of them, in spite of their failings, the Preeces point out, "were for generations the only functioning democracies for millions of the disinherited, disfranchised and dispossessed."

"Dew on Jordan" is not written to expose the little sects. It is rather a warm, friendly attempt to give a true picture of the people themselves, showing how they were drawn by the circumstances of their lives, to jealously regard their particular sect as the one road to salvation. It is the implications of the book that are so terrific.

Franklin D. Roosevelt Scholarship Fund

A Roosevelt Memorial Scholarship Fund provided by the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee has been set up to function under the auspices of the British Trade Union Congress, according to the General Council's report to the 78th annual meeting of the BTUC.

Proposal for establishment of this fund was made to the TUC by Anthony Luchek, representing the CIO-CSC, who suggested that the CIO balance of $35,000 remaining in the AFL-CIO joint war relief fund allocated to Britain be used to establish the Memorial Scholarship.

Art

FOR LABOR'S SAKE

By JOYZELLE SCHORE

FROM the slick pages of art authority comes recognition of labor's contribution toward a people's culture. If there is genuinely to be one, says Walter Abell in the October issue of the Magazine of Art, "then labor's budding art activities seem to offer one of the firmest cornerstones for its foundation."

"The union workshops and art classes are among the very few institutions in America today which offer the common man an opportunity to enjoy free creative activity in art. They are a natural people's reaction to the creative repressions of industrial life," says Abell.

CIO's PAC alone brought millions of repression-born leaflets and pamphlets, with punchy drawings, and hundreds and thousands of posters into the production plants of the gigantic U. S. war machine in 1944. A "committee" in name, but in reality the first step toward a people's political freedom, what more natural than that it should use pictures to carry its message.

Beating cynics to the draw, those who read "propaganda" for "art" where labor is concerned, Abell points out that New York's choosy Museum of Modern Art brought Ben Shahn's original painting, The Welders, used on a PAC poster.

The professor (Mr. Abell teaches art at Michigan State College) has also looked into the question of what business corporations are doing to make art a part of American life, and he finds that there is "acute cultural malnutrition" in this country, despite the fact that the container, drug and cola makers are using art to push their products.

LONG ago, before the days of factories, a man could take pleasure in what he made with his own hand and he could even put some of his own personality into it. But industry, while carrying us along to the civilization we have today, has never been on the lookout for the worker's interests—never made up to him the fun he lost in expressing himself.

It took the trade union movement, first to win for the worker some leisure time, and then to give back to him the creative experience he enjoyed before the industrial revolution.

National Maritime Union members who were encouraged to paint for relaxation started out very self-conscious and embarrassed and took a lot of heckling from their union brothers. But eventually some of them painted well enough to rate an exhibition. One New York art critic who was very much impressed with the show, said some of the pictures were "especially remarkable as the work of men with no previous art training."

Before the reconversion and strike period of 1945 close to 350 children of CIO members in Flint, Mich., were enrolled at the Flint Institute of Arts "receiving free instruction in drawing and painting, sculpture and clay modeling" at the expense of the Creater Flint Industrial Union Council. The cost was pro-rated back to the locals which were mostly United Auto Workers.

THERE are rich veins of talent to be mined in the working population of America. To men like Abell in the art world it is not important whether these talents produce another Rembrandt or another Picasso "because a vital folk culture has always been the best soil for the development of special talent and the best guarantee of a normal appreciation an encouragement of such talent when it arises."

MESS AT SEA was painted by Able Seaman Andrew Volk after he learned how in an NMU art class. He had 20 years of shipping experience before he started painting.

As part of its "Labor Union Program in 1942-43, the Metropolitan Museum of New York City sent circulating exhibitions, to UE, UOPWA, Furriers, Clothing and Maritime union locals. The number of people who sat and listened to a specially loaned Met lecturer was tiny compared to the thousands who came and looked around for themselves, but those who did sit and listen were grateful and enthusiastic. "Our New York," "Art and the Working Man," and "Pictures You Can Buy" were some of the shows.

The preference of workers for pictures by living American artists and for social art—which Abell says is also the taste of the public in general—suggests that people want to know more fully the world they are a part of, and at the same time, they want the life they are a part of better known and understood by everyone else.

AS an art patron labor gives an artist freedom unknown and undreamed of anywhere else. Ben Shahn, who was hired by PAC in 1944 to head its pictorial art division, was "amazed at the speed and efficiency with which results could be produced in an organization backed by complete unity of spiritual intentions." He told Abell "we did fifty times as much work with one-fiftieth as much help" as he had in government jobs.

There is no doubt that union members who like to live with pictures will see eye to eye with an art professor who bewails "a cultural order in which the mass of the population lacks original art of its own and is dependent upon free or cheap reproductions."

Abell warns that "industrial patronage is. . . tending to reinforce the aristocratic tradition" of who should own pictures. It is no wonder that the mass of the people have long lost the habit of thinking that art can be theirs, in their homes and on their walls.

How different the public attitude toward art can be, he says, "becomes evident if we recall the recent federal art projects. During the six short years of their existence these projects not only supported easel painting without restriction on them or treatment, but distributed 52,000 of the resulting oils and water colors to schools, hospitals, and other community institutions.

"They established experimental workshops . . . 86 community art centers in which 8,000,000 people were given the opportunity to enjoy personal creative experience under artists' guidance. Other federal agencies gave us the country's first large-scale demonstration of slum clearance and green-belt towns as ways to better living for the mass of the American people."

WELDERS (below) painted in 1944 by Ben Shahn bridged the gap from factory to art museum. Twenty thousand copies of it were used by PAC as a "register to vote" poster. The original was bought by the Museum of Modern Art in N. Y. City.

Tomorrow's Citizens • By Rose H. Aschuler

TOUGH TIMES

Dad is at home instead of at work. The youngsters don't know why, but they feel that things are not as they should be. Tensions and anxieties are as contagious as measles. Dad's pre-occupation, Mother's distress and worry are catching. It's hard to explain strikes to little children, but it's important to do all you can to make children feel safe, needed and loved. Tomorrow's citizens should be secure if possible, despite today's crisis.

CIO WORKER NEAR DEATH FROM ATOMIC POISONING

By Federated Press

Dorothy Burns, a CIO member in Bloomfield, N. J., filed a $200,000 damage suit against Westinghouse Electric Co. last week as the first U. S. factory worker victim of the atomic age.

Too weak to talk to reporters, Miss Burns is suffering from a fibrous degeneration of the lungs, a heart ailment and a nervous disorder which her lawyers charge is a result of contact with radio-active uranium, the element used in the atomic bomb. Her doctors, who report she has lost nearly 20 pounds since she went to work for Westinghouse four years ago, say her prospect for remaining alive "isn't good."

At Westinghouse, where she earned $40 a week as an unskilled defense worker, Miss Burns was never told by the corporation that she was working on atomic research and endangering her life. She learned about it June 4, 1946, when the army cited Westinghouse's Bloomfield laboratory as "the sole supplier of pure uranium in the country." This was five months after the first symptoms of her sickness appeared. She was forced to quit work last month.

The U. S. Public Health Service has warned that "considerable study must be done to determine the maximum safe exposure to nuclear radiation for workers in this field before atomic energy can have a practical use in industry."

CONSUMERS 'DON'T BUY' DRIVE WORKS

THE distinction of having forced meat prices down "first and fastest" in the larger American cities goes to Washington consumers.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, after a survey of 21 large cities, reported that Washington meat prices "fell first and fastest" after Capital consumers mobilized to bring the prices down. Meat prices had zoomed beyond the pocketbooks of most Washington families after OPA ceilings were removed by the President.

So effective was the campaign in which more than 38,000 Washington women and their families pledged not to buy meats selling for over 60 cents a pound that the Washington Committee for Consumer Protection, which directed the drive, began new action.

A "Don't Buy High" campaign, aimed at the prices Christmas shoppers are being forced to pay, is next on the consumers program.

Cash gifts, gift certificates or bonds are being recommended as Christmas presents by the Washington Consumers Committee. Shoppers are being urged not to buy durable goods which the committee says are priced too high. Practical gifts for the immediate family should be the only gifts, the committee advises.

At the same time, a petition campaign directed against any blanket rent increase in the District of Columbia is soon to be touched off by the committee.

The petitions are to be sent to Rent Administrator Cogswell who has come under increasing pressure by real estate owners seeking a general rent boost.

MURRAY ENDORSES XMAS SEAL DRIVE

WHOLEHEARTED endorsement of the 40th annual Christmas Seal campaign of the Natl. Tuberculosis Assn. as a vital part of national health was given this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

"American workers in particular have long been familiar with the scourge of tuberculosis — the disease of the poor," Pres. Murray said in endorsing the drive. "They have seen it snatch away their loved ones; have experienced the terrible financial crisis that the disease has brought to many families; have looked to the day when tuberculosis may be almost completely eradicated."

Praising the splendid work of the Association in combatting the disease on every front, Pres. Murray called upon the CIO membership and all citizens "to support to the limit of their finanical abilities the 40th annual Christmas Seal Sale."

Health Conference

The fourth annual conference on Labor Health Security will be held Jan. 24 at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, to discuss the social, psychological and educational aspects of workers' health.

Sprucing Up

CUT A FINE FIGURE

By HANNA SHERMAN

SIMPLE language best expresses one of my pet theories. Style is what looks good on you. Yet we all love variety and an occasional change perks up your spirit. The better your posture, the more disciplined your figure, the more varied the clothes you can choose from today's fashion fare.

Now that fabric restrictions have been lifted, designers are once again letting their fancies run riot. They talk easily and glibly about the Dropped Shoulder, Fullness in Back, Padded Hips, Flaring Tunics. They mean fabric, not you.

Underneath these changes in the silhouette, your body should be at its taut best. So for a figure that is a designer's dream—include these exercises in your daily life.

DO you want a small waist and smooth hips?

Sit on the floor, support yourself on your hands and raise feet 3 inches off the floor. Then, slowly roll over onto your tummy, keeping your feet up and knees straight. Roll onto your back, keeping your feet off the floor all the while. Repeat and roll again in the opposite direction. You should feel a stretch between the ribs and hip bones to get the most benefit from this exercise.

Here's another—for that Hand-Span waist. And by the way, it takes less effort to reduce the waist-line than any other part of the body.

Again sit on the floor with your legs apart. Stretch your arms straight out behind your back, clasping hands. Now bring your head forward and touch your right knee. Try to keep your legs flat against the floor. Raise your head and repeat the routine with your left knee. Do six full alternations as a starter and then build up to ten or fifteen a day.

IF YOU want to wear that full-in-back silhouette—sit on the floor, keeping your legs straight out in front of you, with knees together. In this position walk with your hips. Stretch one leg ahead of the other and inch your way along.

Prove to yourself that you can have a tailored figure without the benefit of those tight girdles. Make a measurement chart for yourself and record the changes you note in your tape measure every few days. Then when those new fashions are ready you will be able to accept or reject them entirely on their merit.

As it looks from where I sit, the gals with the streamlined look will be happiest in them.

Readers are invited to send in any questions or comments they would like to make on this column to Miss Sherman, c/o The CIO News, 718 Jackson Pl., Washington 6, D. C.

Is It You?

A man minus his railway ticket is the object of a search by George W. Crockett, Jr., assistant to the secretary-treasurer, CIO Auto Workers Union.

Crockett, appealing through The CIO NEWS, related that a stranger, at the Atlantic City railway station, gave him money to buy a ticket to N. Y. City and then disappeared.

Crockett, who suspects that the stranger was one of the delegates to the CIO Convention, would like to give him his ticket. The address is UAW-CIO, 411 W. Milwaukee Ave., Detroit 2. Mich.

Aid Scripto Strike

The CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries this week sent out an appeal to all affiliates urging financial and moral support for the USA-CIO workers on strike since Oct. 8 against the Scripto Pencil Co., Atlanta, Ga. CWA Pres. Faye Stephenson said part of the contributions received will be used to purchase Christmas gifts for the strikers' children. She asked that all money raised by the auxiliaries be sent direct to Local 3748, USA-CIO, 75 Ivy St., N.E., Atlanta, Ga.

WHEN JIM RETURNS TO THE MILL AFTER BEING TAKEN TO A PICNIC LUNCH BY RUBY CARRUTHERS — DAUGHTER OF THE OWNER OF THE WARRENTOWN MILLS — HE FINDS AN ANXIOUS KIT WAITING FOR HIM...

KIT! WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE?

SHSHSHHSH! I'VE BEEN WAITING FOR YOU TO COME BACK.

IF THEY FIND YOU HERE IN THE SHIPPING DEPARTMENT YOU'LL GET FIRED, KIT. YOU SHOULDN'T HAVE COME.

I HAD TO, JIM; DAD AND THE BOYS HAVE BEEN BUSY DURING LUNCH HOUR.

THEY'VE PASSED THE WORD AROUND TO THE MEN... WE'RE GOING TO HOLD THAT UNION MEETING TONIGHT... IN CLINT'S BARN ... AT MIDNIGHT...

OKAY, KIT. I'LL BE THERE. NOW BE CAREFUL.

DON'T WORRY ABOUT ME, JIM. BUT YOU BE CAREFUL OR THAT WOLFESS RUBY CARRUTHERS WILL GET YOU!

DON'T WORRY. I WON'T GET HOOKED BY RUBY CAR— HEY! WAIT! KIT!

PHEWWW! I'M ALL WORN OUT JIM. PLAYING NURSE-MAID TO A BUNCH OF CRATES IS NO CINCH... THERE OUGHT TO BE A COUPLE OF REST PERIODS...

YOU'LL GET USED TO IT, WOODY. IT'LL GIVE YOU MUSCLES... AND MAKE YOU A LOT SMARTER.

I CAN SEE HOW I'D GET THE MUSCLES, BUT HOW IS IT GOING TO MAKE ME SMARTER?

YOU'LL APPRECIATE WHAT A UNION AND UNION CONDITIONS CAN DO FOR YOU. FOR INSTANCE — YOU WANT A REST PERIOD. WELL, FOR HEAVY WORK LIKE WE DO, THAT'S A GOOD UNION DEMAND!

THAT'S RIGHT, JIM... ANY GUY WORKING CAN FIGURE OUT WHAT THE UNION SHOULD DO IN HIS FACTORY AND— HEY! LOOK WHAT I SEE, JIM!

I SEE HER TOO, WOODY. KEEP YOUR LIP BUTTONED!

HI, JIMMY! I'VE BEEN WAITING FOR YOU. JUMP IN AND I'LL DRIVE YOU HOME!

To Fight Reaction

MURRAY URGES LABOR UNITY

Full Text—Columns 4 and 5

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week personally appealed for labor unity to fight off attacks that have placed "the social, economic and legislative gains of the past decade in dire danger."

Murray directed an appeal for immediate action to Pres. William Green of AFL, Pres. A. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Chairman Thomas C. Cashen of the Railway Labor Executives Assn.

Murray pointed out that workers' living standards have been drastically cut while business profits have soared to record levels, and that Congress has ignored the people's needs.

"Instead," the CIO President said, "legislation was whipped through Congress to shackle labor and weaken its ability to cope with increasing enemy attacks."

The election results, Murray declared, have been deliberately misinterpreted as a "mandate" to anti-labor interests to continue and intensify their drives.

"All the social, economic and legislative gains in the past decade are in dire danger," Murray warned. "The recent court injunction against the United Mine Workers and the vengeful fine imposed is but the first step."

Relief from the attacks against labor can come only from labor unity, the CIO head wrote the three other union leaders. Suggesting an immediate meeting to formulate a common program on economic and legislative matters, Murray said:

"It is my sincere conviction that we, the leaders of our respective organizations, must in the interest of our nation and our democratic institutions arise above any petty or personal quarrels to assure the successful completion of such a program."

At CIO NEWS press time, Whitney had said he was "heartily in accord" with Murray's suggestion. "It is a very sound one and one in which all parties should concur in," he declared.

CIO BACKS MINE WORKERS' APPEAL

ON the theory that liberty is indivisible, CIO will back to the hilt the appeal of the AFL United Mine Workers Union from a $3,500,000 fine imposed on it and a $10,000 fine assessed against its president.

That was the statement made this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who contrasted "the savage character of the sanctions invoked against the Mine Workers with the extraordinary tenderness displayed by the courts toward employers and their interests."

Noting that the U. S. government last April made it clear that the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act applies in suits brought by the government itself, Murray said that injunctions cannot dispose of the problem of fast shrinking earnings due to rising prices.

"The action of the Federal Court in imposing a fine of $3,500,000 on the United Mine Workers and a $10,000 fine upon John L. Lewis, at the request of the government, is a shocking attempt to force American citizens to work against their will through economic coercion," Murray declared.

"During the past 10 years," he pointed out, "our economic history reveals a tremendous acceleration of the process of monopoly—yet no court during this period has imposed comparable fines upon the malefactors of great wealth who are destroying our system of free enterprise in open disregard of the Anti-trust Laws."

WYATT OUSTER BLOW TO VETS

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE foundation dropped out of the government's housing program last week, and war veterans were the worst sufferers.

Wilson Wyatt, who had built up one of the capital's brightest records in his eight-month tenure as National Housing Administrator, submitted his resignation to the President. His departure from top government ranks—the latest in a series which has seen the Administration lose many of its most capable executives—was a victory for private-profit housing interests, which have been gunning for his scalp and for the demise of the National Housing Administration.

Wyatt's resignation was based on his failure to get Presidential backing in his demands for RFC support of a big-scale program of prefabricated homes, and for retention of sufficient price and priority controls to keep the home-building plans on the beam.

His resignation was also a victory for George F. Allen, "court-jester" of top government circles, chairman of the RFC and an intimate friend of the President. R. J. Thomas, head of the CIO housing committee, last week described Allen as a 'fifth-column agent" of the private-profits housing lobby.

IN a final statement, Wyatt charged that the housing crisis is now at a peak. Housing, he added, "as our number one domestic problem . . . required the retention of present federal controls."

With powers granted to it from the Patman Act, the Natl. Housing Administration had had wide authority to allocate building materials, spur construction of low and medium cost housing for veterans, subsidize processors of building materials, make loans to producers, and regulate all phases of the housing program.

In seeking to use that authority, however, Wyatt found himself at constant odds with other government agencies which were reluctant to admit that the veterans housing program was a top-grade emergency measure.

IN a statement following Wyatt's resignation, Pres. Truman argued that the first phase of the housing program had been completed, and that it could be continued within the existing government framework of decontrol policies.

"Speculators and profiteers have apparently convinced Pres. Truman that ample housing is just around the corner. That concept, without the support of a determined government program, is as illusory as the prosperity that kept hidden behind the corner of Herbert Hoover's imagination," declared Chairman Thomas of the CIO housing group.

Thomas scored smear propaganda of the real estate lobby directed aginst "government interference and bureaucracy" and added:

"It is discouraging that high government officials have been taken in by this fast-talking razzle-drazzle. We commend Mr. Wyatt for his courageous efforts to build homes for Americans at prices they can afford."

MURRAY LETTER ON UNITY

Pres. Philip Murray of CIO this week sent the following letter to AFL Pres. William Green, Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and Chairman Thomas C. Cashen of the Railway Labor Executives Assn.

IT has become self-evident that there is a deliberate and monstrous movement under way to cripple, if not destroy, the labor movement of this country.

Since V-J Day the large industrial combines, together with their representatives in Congress, have directed an unabated attack against organized labor. This has taken the form of deliberate measures to bring about inflation at the expense of the American people and through vicious propaganda to place the blame for the resulting hardships at the door of the American workers.

Where labor in the face of shrinking earnings and rising cost of living sought to obtain necessary wage increases, industry arrogantly refused to engage in collective bargaining in order to provoke strikes. This was part of the plan to inflame public opinion against labor.

At the same time the 79th Congress, under the dictatorship of a reactionary coalition, refused to enact any legislation designed to improve the economic well-being of the American people such as broadening and extending the minimum wage law, providing an adequate housing program for veterans and others, extending the Social Security Law, and other measures embraced within President Roosevelt's Economic Bill of Rights. Instead, legislation was whipped through Congress to shackle labor and weaken its ability to cope with increasing enemy attacks.

THE election results of November 5 have been deliberately misinterpreted by these very same predatory interests as a stamp of approval upon their evil design and have obviously encouraged them to deepen their attack upon organized labor.

The stage is set for the 80th Congress to be met by national hysteria deliberately fomented and inspired. In essence, the attempt is to divert the attention of the American people from those interests which are actually causing national hardships for the common people through inflation.

THE membership of the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the Railway Labor Unions demand relief against the intolerable conditions which now confront them and protection against the ferocious attack now being made upon them. This relief can be forthcoming only through the unified action on the part of these three labor organizations. Such unity of action is imperative and of vital importance.

In the interest of our membership, of all of the democratic and progressive forces of our nation—whose very survival may be at stake—I urgently suggest that the leaders of these three national labor organizations meet as quickly as possible for the purpose of devising in unity a common program of economic and legislative measures.

It is my sincere conviction that we, the leaders of our respective organizations, must in the interest of our nation and our democratic institutions arise above any petty or personal quarrels to assure the successful completion of such a program.

21-25% PAY HIKE POSSIBLE WITHOUT BOOSTING PRICES

An independent survey made at the request of CIO this week cited facts and figures to prove that industry can afford wage increases on a general basis ranging from 21-25% without boosting prices and without reducing its profit after taxes in relation to net worth below the 1936-39 level. Robert R. Nathan (right) former deputy director of the Office of War Mobilization, who made the survey, explains details to CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Facts—page 3.

Murray's Warning

PROFIT GREED THREAT TO U. S.

INDUSTRY'S "insatiable appetite for profits" threatens the nation with depression and unemployment.

That was the warning sounded this week by Pres. Philip Murray in a long letter sent to Pres. Truman's "full employment board"—the Council of Economic Advisors—which is soon to report to the White House on the economic health of the nation.

The CIO letter contained a long detailed analysis of the upward spiral of profits and prices, which Murray said if "permitted to continue, will reduce purchasing power and cause mass unemployment."

Wage increases produced no basis for the rise in prices which took place during 1946, a fact proved by official OPA economic studies, the Council was told.

Murray also warned against amendments to the Wagner Act or other contemplated anti-labor legislation as dangerous to the nation's welfare and incapable of providing any degree of "reform" in the country's industrial relations.

"The efficient functioning of the Act (the Wagner Act) for the preservation of industrial peace," Murray wrote, "demands rather a substantial increase in the appropriations and staff of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, to prevent the delays and breakdowns which have plagued us in the past."

The Council was also urged to give its support to a broad program of legislation for social reform, to call for sharpened prosecution of big monopolies under the anti-trust laws, and the development of a more equitable tax system.

HIGHPOINTS of the Murray letter included:

• "In the first eight months of 1946, the share of national income payments going to salary and wage earners was relatively lower than it had been during 1936-39 and 1942-45. Business interests, through profits, dividends, rents, etc., were, therefore, getting a greater proportion of national income."

• "The only method of raising consumer purchasing power to the levels necessary to restore living standards and prevent recession is through the process of collective bargaining.

• "The cornerstone of our national economic policy must therefore be an honest and complete return to bona fide collective bargaining . . . together with effective control by government over profiteers to protect the American people against the continued inflationary rise in the cost of living."

• "If this present distorted profits picture continues, an economic collapse is bound to occur. The inequitable distribution of our national income which has occurred during this first post war year must be altered."

• "The danger signs are clear. Production in recent months has begun to level off at an annual rate substantially below what is needed to utilize our greatly expanded capacity and to meet our peoples' increased requirements for goods and jobs."

• Monopoly interests . . . have had the crowning arrogance to mobilize their vast propaganda machinery to persuade the American people, 80% of whom are themselves wage and salary earners, that 'labor' is to blame for inflationary prices, shortages and production delays.

• "The Council has the urgent responsibility of re-affirming the facts: that the strikes and shortages of 1946 reflected the refusal of our biggest monopolies to accept the national wage policy of the U. S. government, their refusal to bargain on terms found perfectly reasonable by government mediators, and their desire to destroy price controls by creating artificial shortages."

• "The contribution which these wage increases (in early 1946) made to price increases was almost nil. Labor adequately proved its case that wage increases do not force prices to rise. The OPA's 18th Quarterly Report bears out labor's position . . . Industry must not be permitted to increase its prices because of wages. It is a flimsy excuse that has no foundation."

• "These people in Congress, supported by the reactionary interests of the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce, who feel that the solution of our present labor problem can be confined to anti-labor legislation, fail to realize that labor disputes of recent months were disputes which have revolved around basic economic issues.

• "The wave of strikes which occurred following V-J Day had little to do with union recognition, jurisdictional problems, inter-union rivalries, etc. These disputes revolved mainly around the basic economic issues of the day . .

• "The basic problems relating to improving living standards, higher wages, more equitable distribution of our national production must be solved, and they cannot be solved through the passage of crippling anti-labor legislation."

In addition to general pay increases, and the strengthening of collective bargaining machinery, Murray urged a legislative program of tax reform; extension of social security, public health and medical care; wage-hour protection based on a 65c-75c minimum wage law; strengthening of anti-trust practices to curb monopolies and monopoly practices; passage of a Fair Employment Practices Bill; restoration of an adequate veterans housing bill and passage of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft general housing bill; full protection for four million small farmers; and a fully-developed public works program to be placed in immediate operation as soon as employment falls.

It's Wilson Again!

A call for legislation to prohibit industry-wide bargaining by labor unions was sounded last week by Pres. C. E. Wilson of General Motors before the Illinois Manufacturers Assn. meeting in Chicago.

Wilson also denounced the closed shop, maintaining that "compulsory unionism is totalitarian," and asked for laws to cover unions and a clarification of the Wagner Act.

Wilson had no criticism of the way industrial monopolies are operating, and asked for federal tax relief for corporations.

WORKERS' OUTPUT HIGHER

The outworn fable that workers are demanding more money for less work was exposed this week in N. Y. City as completely phony by Dr. Ewan Clague, commissioner of labor statistics of the U. S. Labor Dept.

Addressing a meeting of the Society for the Advancement of Management, Clague got across these points:

In a limited group of about 20 manufacturing industries for which data are available, manhour output in the third quarter of this year was averaging between 4% and 5% above the levels of a year ago.

Complaints of low efficiency are most prevalent where labor-management relations are poor, Clague said.

GUARANTEE WEEKLY WAGES IN BRITAIN

Six unions in the British iron and steel industry have just signed an agreement with the Iron and Steel Trades Employers' Assn., insuring a guaranteed weekly wage to all workers in the industry.

The agreements have arisen out of the Essential Work Order imposed in wartime in order to hold workers in their jobs.

The Essential Work Order, while preventing workers from leaving their posts without permission from the Minister of Labor, also laid on the employer the obligation to guarantee a full week's pay.

American Worker Still Earning Purple Heart

The shooting war is over, but American industry is still maiming and killing workers, a Bureau of Labor Statistics report on manufacturing work injuries showed this week.

Covering the third quarter of 1946, the summary put combined saw and planning mills at the top of the list with 70.6 disabling injuries per million man-hours worked. Plants performing sawmill operations only had an average of 60.4 and the wooden box industry followed with 50.2 Average score for all industries for the quarter was 18.1.

Behind the statistics, the bureau revealed, is a record of 128,800 manufacturing workers injured, of whom about 400 died within the quarter. Some 5,400 others, it was estimated, would have some form of permanent physical impairment. Value of working time lost during the quarter alone was estimated at over $20,000,000.

A FEW big businessmen who can see beyond the end of their noses are beginning to be worried about the "we're against everything" attitude of their colleagues.

Charles Luckman, youthful president of the Lever Bros. Soap Company, sounded off in that fashion during a recent Chicago speech. Luckman pointed out that higher wages obviously had not hurt his corporation, since it had grown from 180 workers, each receiving 21c an hour, to 6,000 workers averaging $1.13 an hour for a workweek which had been cut from 50 to 40 hours.

"Why is it that during the past 20 years American business has become identified in the public mind as opposed to everything that spells greater security, well-being or peace of mind for the little guy?" Luckman asked. He added that big business had achieved its unsavory reputation "because, by and large, we earned it."

"We yipped and yowled against wage laws," he said, recalling that big business had fought collective bargaining, unemployment insurance, health and safety ordnances, social security and increased taxes for education.

"We did all these things without making one single constructive suggestion which would assure the American people of our desires to achieve the same results for them . . ."

$19 MILLION PAY HIKE IN TEXTILE

THE CIO Textile Workers Union this week obtained a 10c an hour general increase for 90,000 cotton textile workers in New England and the Middle Atlantic states and announced its intention to seek an increase of 15c an hour for 100,000 workers in Southern cotton textile mills.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said that the increase will become effective Jan. 6, the first pay day in 1947, and will aggregate about $19 million annually. He said that it was the first general pay increase negotiated by a major labor union since price controls were removed.

Decision to seek the 15c increase for cotton textile workers in Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana, Texas and the Carolinas was made last weekend at a conference at Atlanta attended by 400 delegates from 140 locals.

At Atlanta, Rieve said that in spite of gains made by TWUA, "the textile workers are still among the lowest-paid industrial workers in the country."

ANNUAL WAGE GETS 'GO-SIGN' IN PACKING

SIGNIFICANT progress toward a guaranteed annual wage for the entire packing industry was made this week as the CIO Packinghouse Workers signed an agreement with the Cudahy Packing Co., which includes a statement of policy recognizing the "importance and desirability" of such a plan. Cudahy is one of the Big Four packers.

A more complete plan for guaranteed year-round pay was included in the contract signed by the CIO union and the Tobin Packing Co., which specifically provides for 52-week employment at 40 hours' pay a week at the employe's regular rate. Some 800 Tobin workers at Fort Dodge and Estherville, Iowa, are covered by this plan.

In addition both Cudahy and Tobin granted average wage increases of 15c an hour, the hikes ranging from 7¼ to 18½c.

The Cudahy agreement states that the company and the union are to engage in an independent study as to the "practicability of an annual wage guarantee" and that the company is to furnish the union with its conclusions.

Affected by the Cudahy agreement are some 11,000 workers at ten plants throughout the country.

The Packinghouse Workers are no strangers to the successful operation of a guaranteed annual wage plan, installed several years ago at the Hormel Packing Co., Austin, Minn. The firm employs 4,000 workers.

7 to 2 Against The People

The Twohey Analysis of Newspaper Opinion, reporting on editorial and front pages of major newspapers, said that "the government study proposing a guaranteed annual wage is deprecatingly questioned or disapproved by 71% (of the papers commenting on it), approved by 19%, and treated in unclear manner by 10%."

Press score on this issue: 7 to 2 against the people.

Wage Rise Needed To Prevent Crash

By FRED d'AVILA

THE CIO's 1947 campaign to protect and better the living standards of American workers opened this week, supported by facts from an independent economic survey which revealed that industry generally can grant substantial pay boosts without raising prices.

Such wage increases are necessary if the nation is to avoid another depression, the survey contended.

The survey pointed out:

1 That a 23% rise in real weekly earnings is necessary to bring them back to the January 1945 level.

2 That "in manufacturing industries alone, the end of 1946 level of corporate profits after taxes will support a 21% increase in the earnings of production workers, without any further expansion in volume, and without reducing the return after taxes on net worth to a rate below that of 1936-1939."

3 That "it may be reasonably conjectured that total corporate business can suport a 25% increase in wages on the same basis that manufacturing alone can support a 21% increase."

The survey was prepared by Robert R. Nathan Associates Inc. at the request of the CIO. Nathan and Oscar Gass, who collaborated in producing it, pointed out that the facts concern the wage-price profit relationship in industry generally.

Adaptations of the survey for particular industries will be presented by CIO unions in bargaining conferences which will precede reopening of wage negotiations this winter and spring.

The presentation of the survey at a luncheon for the press at the Statler Hotel in Washington, D. C. preceded by less than a week a wage meeting of CIO's "Big Three"—Steel, Auto and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The survey was prepared at the request of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who attended the luncheon where it was presented, and who will preside over a meeting of the "Big Three" in Pittsburgh, Dec. 16, and following meetings of the CIO Steelworkers Executive Board and Wage Policy Committee.

In New York, meanwhile, the CIO Auto Workers Executive Board announced that it will ask for a 23.5c an hour general wage increase from the auto industry.

THE Nathan report—71 pages long—marshalled facts and figures to show that profits on investments have far outstripped wages and salaries and that the interests of the nation lie in an adjustment of balance to prevent another depression.

"There are those," said the report, "who urge labor to abstain from requesting wage increases on the grounds that such a policy would avoid further economic and social difficulties.

"These people must assume either that the present economic situation is already sound or else that it contains within itself elements leading to an early healthy balance and stabilization.

"We reject this point of view. The present imbalance between wages and profits is unsound; it is not automatically self-terminating in a manner compatible with general economic stability. Rather, it is self-terminating through a recession.

"Unles there is an immediate increase in wages or a sharp drop in prices, we are flirting with collapse.

"There is no evidence to date to indicate that business will cut prices prior to a depression in which unemployment, declining incomes and shrinking demands will make price declines unavoidable. This is too high a price for bringing wages and profits into sounder alignment.

Raising wages without increasing prices appears to offer the only currently possible means of bringing about the kind of relationship which will avoid a serious decline in business activity.

"Such a policy would step up buying power and bring back into the market for many categories of goods those millions of working families who have been removed from the market because of rising prices."

THE report debunked the theory put forth by management that the sharp rise in prices has been due to wage increases. Noting that the hourly labor cost in all manufacturing industry has risen only 8.6c from January 1945 to October 1946, the report stated:

"Even if there had been no increase in productivity during the past two years, labor cost increases would hardly begin to explain the rise in prices.

"An increase in hourly labor costs in manufacturing even of 8.6c from January 1945 to October 1946 is an increase of only 8.2%. This compares with an increase of 25.3% in all wholesale prices between the same dates and an increase of 27.9% in the wholesale prices of manufactured articles alone."

Listing sharp declines in real wages (see chart), the report said that in indicating the increases necessary to restore former standards "we do not mean to suggest that there is ground for national complacency concerning even the highest standard of real earnings yet attained by American workers," adding that this "falls far below the level that we are accustomed to consider 'the American way of life.'"

Profits, the report pointed out, have risen far faster than wages and salaries. Since 1939 industry's take has increased 183% while the total received by all workers has risen only 150%. The corporate figure is AFTER payment of taxes!

The report, Pres. Murray said, is placed "before the bar of public opinion" and can "help the CONSUMER PRICES UP, PURCHASING POWER DOWN: To offset the increase in consumer prices and the drop in weekly earnings since January 1945, wage earners in manufacturing would require 21% more income. In October 1946, the weekly pay envelope of workers in all manufacturing industries purchased only four-fifths of what they could buy in January 1945.

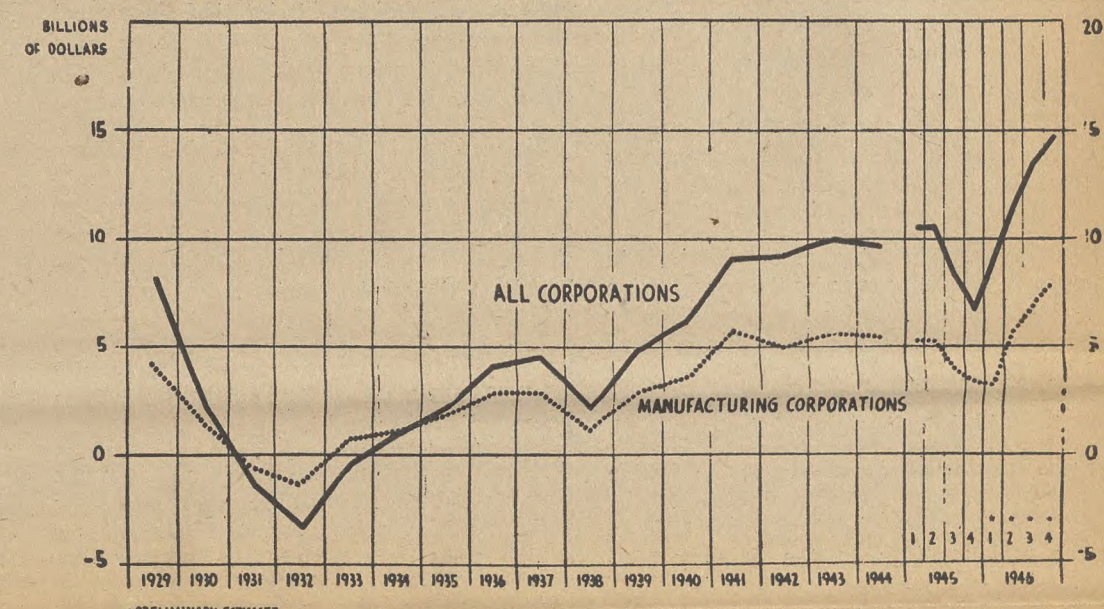
DEFLATED PAY ENVELOPES: In terms of real buying power, average weekly earnings in manufacturing dropped more than $1 during 1945. Although modest gains were made in dollar earnings since February 1946, the rise in prices, especially after June, more than devoured the increase. In October 1946, average weekly earnings, measured in what the January 1945 dollar would buy, were still $1 below January 1946 and $8 below January 1945.

PROFITS AFTER TAXES

ALL CORPORATIONS AND MANUFACTURING CORPORATIONS 1929-1946



*PRELIMINARY ESTIMATE

PROFITS AFTER TAXES AT NEW HIGHS: Profits after taxes during the war reached all-time records, bettering the previous highs of 1929. Because of favorable tax provisions and the increase in earnings during 1946, profits after taxes are far higher than ever in our history. Industry went into high gear in 1946, and with continued favorable tax regulations, profits after taxes have sky-rocketed to 50% over the war peak and nearly four times the 1939-46 average. (Charts by Robert R. Nathan Associates Inc.).

RIDING FOR A FALL

IN a careful and conservative study of the economic state of the nation, Robt. R. Nathan Associates have assembled government statistics on wages, prices and profits which point to this inescapable conclusion:

Our economy is riding for a fall, with disastrous results for all sections of the population, unless something is done immediately to close the ever-widening gap between lower wages and purchasing power, on the one hand, and sky-high prices and profits, on the other.

The report points to the unsoundness of the present "boom", based on high production, high prices and super-profits, but accompanied by a sharp decline in mass purchasing power.

"The demand for some types of goods and services has already softened," it notes. "Millions of low-income families find themselves priced out of the market.

"Long-term prosperity must be based on expanding mass buying power. It cannot be achieved by shrinking the buying power of the workers in order that profits may rise far beyond reasonable and stable levels."

★ ★ ★

IN THE past two years, the report shows, average weekly earnings of manufacturing workers have declined even in dollars and cents.

When account is taken of the increase in living costs, as shown even by the conservative Bureau of Labor Statistics index, real weekly earnings of manufacturing workers have dropped so far that, by the end of 1946, an increase of about 23% will be necessary to bring them back to the level of January 1945.

In the durable goods industries, the decline has been still sharper, so that a rise of 27.5% would have been required in October 1946 to restore real earnings to the January 1945 level.

Meanwhile corporate profits after taxes are approaching $15 billion for this year, which is 50% higher than the war peak and an all-time high for the United States.

The present profit level, after taxes, in fact, is 3¾ times as high as the average of the pre-war years 1936-39.

★ ★ ★

THERE ARE three main dangers to the whole country in the present situation, according to the report.

(1) "The living standards of the masses of our people—never better than a tenuous compromise with minimum requirements of health and decency—are being seriously undermined.

(2) "The long-term stability of our economy is being endangered by a shift of income away from the consumption of the masses and toward the savings of the relatively few.

(3) "The social and political health of our democracy is being threatened by the concentration of income and wealth and the resultant concentration of power and influence."

★ ★ ★

TO RIGHT the present situation, there must be an immediate increase in wages or a sharp drop in prices, the Nathan report says. Otherwise, "we are flirting with collapse."

Since there is no evidence that business will cut prices prior to a depression, substantial wage increases without further price increases are clearly called for, not only from the worker's point of view but also for the benefit of the whole economy.

The argument that price increases must necessarily follow wage increases is repeatedly knocked into a cocked hat by the hard facts presented in the report.

It shows that most of this year's wage boosts could have been absorbed from profits without raising prices, and still left industry a high profit level.

At the present time excess corporate profits are so great that a general wage increase of 25% could be granted, without raising prices and without reducing profits below the 1936-39 average of 6.9%.

BY LEN DE CAUX

REMEMBER the legend about King Midas? He grew so filthy rich that people said "everything he touched turned to gold."

Later columnists and crooners of long, long ago took this gag and built quite a story out of it.

Midas, they said, acquired the power of literally turning all he touched into gold—and at first thought he had a swell racket.

He would wander around touching every rock in sight until he had more gold bullion than Uncle Sam has buried in the hills of Kentucky—and was even more puzzled than Uncle Sam as to what the heck to do with it all.

BUT SOON some disadvantages began to appear in this early legendary version of Coolidge-Hoover prosperity and the 1929 stock boom.

Midas happened to have a human as well as a business side. So when Mrs. Midas raised her rosebud lips to his, he could not forebear embracing her. Whereupon the lady turned into a golden statue—which was not very satisfactory to a warm-blooded family man like Midas.

But worse was yet to come, for Midas also liked to eat. When he grabbed up a hot biscuit, he said, "Dang that cook, it's as hard as a rock"—and a rock it was, a rock of gold.

When he took his golden knife and fork to cut into a thick steak, it went all right until each juicy morsel toched his lips only to turn into tooth-breaking and indigestible gold.

How the story ended, I don't remember, except that somewhere down the line Midas acquired the ears of an ass—indicating the Newspaper Guildsmen of those times took a rather jaundiced view of get-rich-quick profiteers.

But since I've taken a columnist's license in relating my own exclusive version of a news-story carried by all the papers centuries ago, I may as well supply my own ending.

What the old boy finally said was: "To hell with all this golden profit—what this country and I need is more consuming power."

THE ABOVE is inspired by reading the statistics assembled by Robert R. Nathan Associates, at the request of the CIO, on present wages, prices and profits.

The report begins: "Prosperity far beyond anything ever achieved previously in peacetime seems to be prevalent today."

Everything John P. Midas of Wall Street touches turns into gold. 'Swonderful.

"Corporate profits after taxes are about 50% higher than the war peak and utterly without earlier precedent in our national experience."

But there's a fly, a whale of a fly, in all this gravy.

Pointing to the severe break in the stock market, the Nathan report says: "Despite the record level of current profits, the more far-sighted members of the business community sense something unsound in the situation."

★ ★ ★

THE RUB is that folks have to eat and raise families—and they can't eat super-profits on corporation ledgers any more than gold biscuits.

While profits and prices soar, "millions of low-income families find themselves priced out of the market"—they just can't afford to buy at present prices, with their present wages.

The average weekly earnings of production workers in manufacturing, taking into account increased living costs, have declined from $47.50 in January 1945 to $39.24 in October 1946.

★ ★ ★

UNLESS American business gives thought to raising wages and mass purchasing power, it too is going to be hit in the bread-basket by the growing lack of consuming power.

"Unless there is an immediate increase in wages or a sharp drop in prices, we are flirting with collapse"—with depression, unemployment, misery and business bankruptcy.

The solution is easier for the modern Midases than for their legendary counterpart. The Nathan report shows American business can increase wages 25% without increasing prices, and still maintain its pre-war profit level of 6.9%.

Unless they want to grow the ears of stubborn asses, or at any rate act like the same, they will sit down and negotiate substantial wage increases, as demanded by the CIO for the good of labor, of the country and of business itself.

$5 Million For Propaganda

INSIDE STORY ON THE NAM

YOU'VE heard the story about the gold brick artist selling the Brooklyn Bridge to a small town boy who came to the big city to make good. Now there's a different version of the same story.

The Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers is going to "sell" America to the Americans.

They decided that after a three-day convention in the ornate Waldorf Astoria ballroom in N. Y. City last week. They even tossed $5 million into a propaganda kitty to do the job.

But the high point of the convention was the labor relations policy adopted after two days of gradually intensified drumbeating that reached its crescendo with speeches by Republican Senator Joseph H. Ball and Democratic Senator Harry F. Byrd.

The labor policy called for emasculation of the Natl. Labor relation Act, the outlawing of the closed and union shop, and an end to industry-wide bargaining.

It was a weasel worded statement, declaring the NAM's "faith" in collective bargaining, on the one hand, while cutting down the extent of collective bargaining to industry's own ground, on the other.

"The union as well as the employer should be obligated, by law, to bargain collectively in good faith, provided that a majority of the employes in the appropriate unit wish to be represented by the union," the first "principle" of the labor policy declared. Decades ago the NAM refused to accept the "obligation," and many of its members still refuse.

"No strike should have the protection of the law if it involves issues which do not relate to wages, hours or working conditions, or demands which the employer is powerless to grant," another "principle" states. That knocks union security and the check-off out of bargining talks.

"No individual should be deprived of his right to work at an available job, nor should anybody be permitted to harm or injure the employe, or his family, or his property, at home, at work or elsewhere. Mass picketing and any other form of coercion or intimidation should be prohibited," the policy set forth. That opens the door for scabs and police brutality.

THE labor policy was released with accompanying headlines proclaiming the NAM's "liberalism." Earl Bunting, newly elected NAM president and head of the O'Sullivan Rubber Co. of Winchester, Va., said benevolently: "Management has no desire to push the pendulum sweep so far against labor that it loses its legitimate gains."

FREDERICK CRAWFORD
Boasted of being called a "fascist"

But the election of new directors indicated otherwise. Added to the top NAM board were J. Howard Pew, Sun Oil Co. president and a leader in reactionary Republican circles, and Gwilym A. Price, Westinghouse Electric Co. president, whose adamant refusal to bargain in the last wage negotiation period led to UE's longest strike.

Already on the board are the top ranking industrialists of the 30 companies that control one third of the nation's business. Executives of General Motors, General Foods, Armco, DuPont, Firestone Tire, Eastman Kodak and other greater and lesser lights argued the labor policy out.

The bigger industrialists, especially in the auto industry, wanted a tougher labor policy. The smaller manufacturers, represented by some trade associations, didn't want to get too tough. So they evolved their "firmly righteous" policy.

That policy is now in the hands of the NAM's regular staff, headed by eagle-faced Walter B. Weisenburger, executive vice-president, and Public Relations vice-president Holcombe Parkes, as the two big wheels in the extensive NAM movement.

For the next year that team will hammer away in the nation's newspapers, radio stations, public schools, churches and women's and veterans groups. With $5 million to do the job of protecting profits, the NAM plans to turn on a more intensive propaganda show than the show that broke the back of OPA earlier this year.

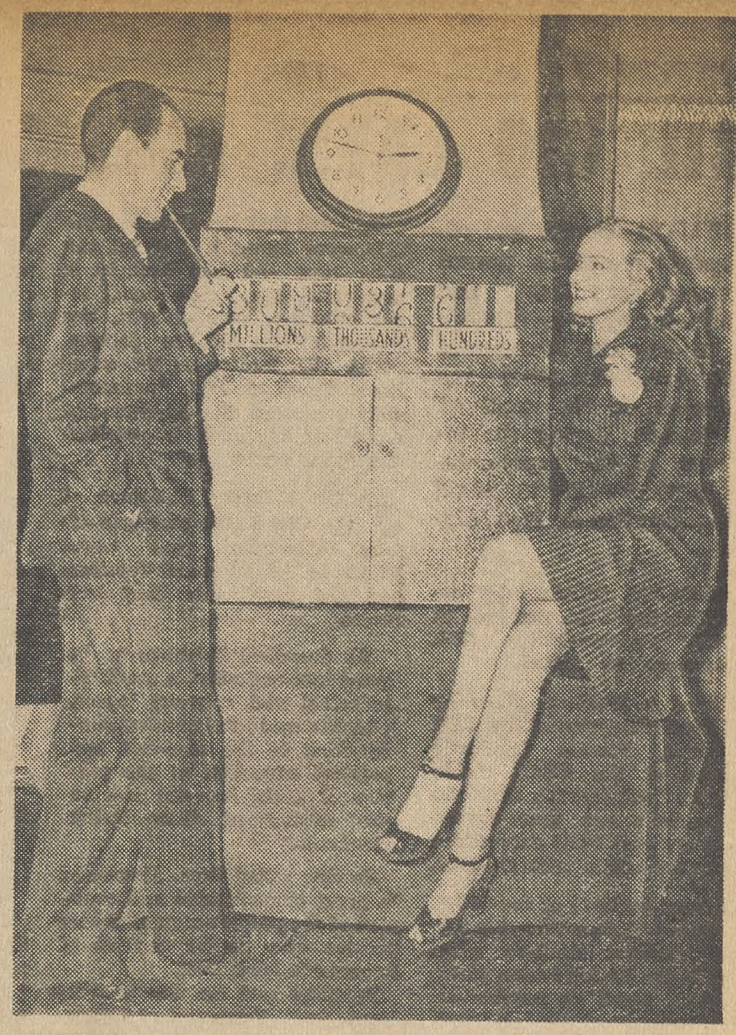
Assuming the credit for the killing of OPA after a few-million-dollar advertising drive, the NAM is now going after labor in the same "positive" manner. They admit that they didn't kill OPA by merely saying "we're against it." They said "We want OPA—in the hands of the housewives."

Now they plan to say "labor should be controlled by public opinion." And they're out to make public opinion with their money. They even plan to supply leadership to the American worker.

The American laborer, according to Frederick Crawford, notorious union busting industrialist, "is so hungry for leadership, he'll follow anything that comes along. If the Pied Piper came along there would be no one in town in 30 minutes."

In a special public relations session attended by more than a thousand of the 2,560 NAM delegates, Crawford boasted of his citation as a "fascist" by Elizabeth Hawes in a recent book.

"Hell, this is a new day," Crawford told his eager listeners, "let's get on it." He told the small and large manufacturers from almost every U. S. industrial city that "America is a series of little communities, little countries." He said the job of fitting the NAM program in the communities was up to manufacturers in each community.



Figures—of all sorts—apparently interest NAM Economist Dr. Ralph Robey who constructed this "speedometer" to show NAM delegates the amount of government spending per minute. The girl is a model.

Aside from the campaign to influence the 50 million stockholders, and the "worker who sits at our feet and waits to be told," Crawford urged that a special attempt be made to advise white-collar workers their interests lie with management.

This was only another attempt to split and isolate segments of labor. In communities, the industrialists were advised to direct public opinion so that labor would be "ostracized" by the public in case of strikes.

Behind the extensive propaganda show presented at the Waldorf was the fear that the U. S. would become as "collectivist" as many of the European countries.

THOUGH the convention proceeded without a hitch in the grand ballroom, it was actually directed from the Waldorf's fourth floor. There the directors met for daily sessions. There the committees argued their program out. There the public relations set-up pounded away for the newspapers, radio's and magazines. There the directors and candidates for the jobs held their cocktail parties.

The ballroom was only the stage for fourth floor actions, and only one "rank and file" delegate, a big, paunchy small businessman, took the floor. He persisted in seconding most of the resolutions proposed by the Board of Directors. After the fourth time, the chairman, noting that the NAM was a "democratic organization," asked him to give someone else a chance to second the resolutions.

The resolutions, to which the delegates quietly mumbled their "ayes," "reaffirmed" the NAM's "faith in free speech," acknowledged their "obligations" to veterans, asked improvement in the Labor Department's consumers' price index, and voiced their renewed opposition to Communists.

Unvoiced recognition of the CIO Public Workers organizing achievements among teachers was made in a resolution urging better pay "to attract competent men and women," and to improve "teaching standards" to meet the "strong challenge of subversive ideologies."

The foreign policy resolution called upon the U. S. to have at all times "an Army, Navy and Air Force equipped with enough leadership, manpower, weapons and supplies to defend our borders and to cooperate with other nations in preserving order in the world."

Opposition to private and "government" cartels and monopolies was voiced in the same resolution which urged the U. S. to refuse to do business with intergovernmental cartels. Earlier, however, speakers noted that American industries supply 40% of the world's goods and 80% of the nation's mnufacturing facilities.

As a counter-proposal to labor's demands for a guaranteed annual wage, the NAM called upon "individual companies to give immediate more aggressive attention to ways and means of stablizing employment."

Attacks on all forms of government spending and controls and pleas for drastic tax reductions were other points of the NAM's "liberal" program. Increased mechanization of agriculture, a blow aimed at the small farmer, was also advised.

The key to the NAM's program was frankly stated—surprisingly enough—on the business pages of the N. Y. Times. A columnist admitted that for the last 50 years the NAM has done nothing but offer "opposition to proposals concerned with improving the national economy."

This year's version of NAM policy looked no different to labor observers. It was as subtle as burlesque and just as brazen. When the three-day strip tease was over, all that remained were a few guadily painted "free enterprise" feathers that didn't completely hide a wrinkled anti-labor program and the hardened arteries of native fascism.

Putting on a smiling front for the big guns operating the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers is Earl Bunting (center) newly-elected president. Executive Vice-Pres. Walter B. Weisenburger (left) and Public Relations Vice-Pres. Holcombe Parks flank him. Parkes, a former press agent for the railroads, and Weisenburger, an ex-banker and Chamber of Commerce executive, run the NAM show which is aimed at breaking unions.

Contrast To AFL

HAIL CIO LATIN AMERICAN POLICY

THE CIO's friendly and cooperative attitude toward Latin American Labor was sharply contrasted by Mexican labor leaders with attempts at interference, disruption and domination on the part of AFL leaders, during the recent visit of CIO representatives to Mexico City to attend the inauguration of Pres. Aleman.

Mexico's big national labor organization, the CTM, was host to the CIO representatives. AFL leaders were not invited.

Both at a luncheon given by Pres. Fidel Velazquez of the CTM and Pres. Vicente Lombardo Toledano of the CTAL (Latin American Confederation of Workers) and at a later press conference, there were many expressions of close friendship with the CIO.

"Before the birth of the CIO," Toledano said, "we did not enjoy good fraternal relations with labor in the United States, since the AFL based its policies on a suposed authority to intervene often in the internal political problems of our countries."

He noted that the CTM and the CIO were founded at about the same time and had brought a new spirit into international labor relations, parallel with the Roosevelt Good Neighbor policies.

The AFL leaders on the other hand, Toledano said, "unfortunately represent the opposite approach of 'big stick' imperialism and dollar diplomacy."

JACOB Potofsky, chairman of the CIO Latin American affairs Committee, paid warm tribute to Velazquez and Toledano and the movements they represent.

He described Toledano as "a great internationlist, a great intellectual and spiritual leader, who has made the greatest contribution to the economic and political education of the peoples of Latin America and to the raising of their living standards."

He also hailed Pres. Aleman as "a great humanitarian and champion of the people's rights," whose policies were similar to those of Roosevelt's New Deal.

Potofsky said he was glad to learn from Velazquez and Toledano that AFL splitting tactics were meeting with no success.

"We regard the efforts of the AFL to split the trade union movement in Latin America as contrary to the ethics of organized labor, and contrary to U. S. policy of not interfering in the internal affairs of Latin American countries.

"The workers of Latin America should make their own decisions on form of organization and polices. Any interference from outside is an invasion of the sovereign rights of the labor movement."

Potofsky said the CIO would resist exploitation of Mexican labor by U. S. capital.

Sec.-Treas David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, who addressed the luncheon in Spanish to add his cordial greetings to Mexican labor, said that he "agreed with Pres. Aleman that the benefits of Mexican industry should stay in Mexico."

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers went on from Mexico to San Jose, Costa Rica, as fraternal delegate of the CIO to an executive meeting of the CTAL representing labor in all Latin American countries.

LIVING IN LUXURY: Admiral Horthy, former regent of Hungary and a leading European fascist, is shown here in a cordial confab with the late Benito Mussolini. The shot was made in 1936. Now, with the Duce and the Fuehrer dead, their pal still lives in luxury in the American zone of Germany.

NAZI AID LIVING IN THE VELVET

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WHY ARE American military authorities in Germany giving deluxe treatment to Admiral Nicholas Horthy, fascist ex-ruler of Hungary, and Hitler's "little helper" in eastern Europe during the years of Nazi aggression?

That question arose this week as the result of disclosures in a Swiss newspaper and in the Central European Observer, a London weekly magazine, that Horthy is living, along with his retinue, in the luxurious accommodations of an unscarred Bavarian village.

In his hey-day, Horthy was one of the most reactionary government leaders in central and eastern Europe. Brought to power shortly after the first World War by outside armies of intervention, Horthy ruled the Hungarian nation with an iron hand for 25 years. When Hitler rose to power, Horthy quickly hitched his wagon to the star of Nazi imperialism.

As a reward, Hungary was given sizeable crumbs from Hitler's table. A large section of Transylvania, long owned by Roumania, was turned over to Hungary. Horthy grabbed a slice of Yugoslavia, as his share of the loot when Hungarian and Nazi armies together marched into that country in the early spring of 1941.

Horthy was always a source of bitter comment by central European democrats. They pointed sharply to the fact that the Hungarian dictator held the rank of "admiral" in a non-existent navy, and the title of "regent" in a kingdom which had no monarch.

Eventually, the thieves of Nazi Germany and fascist Hungary fell out, as the tides of war turned against them. Hungary's armed forces had participated in the looting of the Soviet Union, but in late 1944, the Red Army was on the counter-offensive, and Horthy had lost his usefulness to the Nazi gang in Berlin. He was swept from office in favor of a more militant group of fascist fanatics, the Arrow Cross movement.

TODAY, Horthy is living well and eating well. Schweizer Illustriert (Swiss Illustrated) was permitted to send a reporter to interview him in the little town of Weilheim, an hour's ride from Munich. Munich is in ruins, but Weilheim, unscarred by war, remains a pretty, luxurious resort.

"Highest Excellence" is the way that Horthy's retainers stilll address the old dictator. American staff officers "are received at the pretty villa in a manner suitable to Horthy's position," the Central European Observer reports caustically.

Together with his wife, his brother and a grandchild, Horthy manages to get along with only three servants! His food and clothing needs are supplied by UNRRA, according to the report.

IT'S a soft life for a man who almost went on trial at Nuremburg, who has been judged by the Yugoslavs as a war criminal.

For Horthy did his fascist work well.

He signed a Treaty of Friendship with Yugoslavia and alibied his invasion of that country a few weeks later with an offhand remark that the government of Yugoslavia had changed, and "I had to intervene."

Horthy pioneered, along with Hitler, in systematic anti-Semitism and persecution of all minority groups. His government, at Horthy's direct orders, handed over hundreds of thousand of Jews to the Nazis and sent them on their way to extermination camps.

His propaganda ministry developed a mass wave of hysterical hate against Americans. Army Air Forces fliers who were forced to land in Hungary were frequently mauled, assaulted or lynched by persons who had believed the propaganda that American fliers were dropping poison chocolates to Hungarian children. Hundreds of American aviators lost their lives in Horthy's Hungary.

Domestic reforms in postwar Hungary have also upset Horthy and his brother in the comfort of their Bavarian village, according to the Swiss interview. Horthy was the favorite of his country's great landowners, whose property covered the great majority of the fertile farm land of Hungary. Today that land has been distributed among the poor peasants.

'AMBASSADORS' TO MEXICO

CIO OFFICIALS ATTEND ALEMAN INAUGURATION

By LEN DE CAUX

THE CIO had its ambassadors at the recent inauguration ceremonies for Mexico's new president, Miguel Aleman.

While hundreds of governmental dignitaries, from nearly every country in the world, lined up in the National Palace in Mexico City to shake hands with the new President and members of his cabinet, the lady from Hollywood standing near me spotted Jacob Potofsky.

'Who is that striking-looking man with the beard?" she asked.

I explained that he was the Chairman of CIO's Committee on Latin American Affairs and president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; and that he, along with Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, was representing the CIO at the inauguration, by special invitation of the Confederation of Mexican Workers (CTM).

"But I don't understand," she said, "what all this has to do with the CIO. This isn't a labor government, is it? And why should the CIO be interested in Mexico? Are the labor unions here anything like those in the United States? And . . ."

I don't know how good a job I did answering the lady's questions, since her attention was constantly distracted by be-medaled generals in strange uniforms, notables of all kinds from the United States and other countries, and all the glitter and pomp of the occasion.

But now that I am back from a brief visit to Mexico, which took me to union halls and factories and workers' homes, and into some of the highways and by-ways of the Indian country, as well as through the cosmopolitan glamor of Mexico City and the inauguration ceremonies, I shall try to put down on paper "what this has to do with the CIO"—and send the lady a marked copy.

MEXICO, our nearest and perhaps least-known neighbor, is about to be "discovered" for the first time by hundreds of thousands of Americans.

Owing to the difficulties and inconveniences of tourist travel to war-torn Europe, more than 33% of Americans who plan to travel abroad in 1947 will go to Mexico, according to a recent Time-Life-Fortune poll.

The Mexican authorities, eager to entice American tourists as a source of much-needed dollar-income for their country, estimate there will be between 500,000 and 600,000 American visitors next year, about twice as many as this year.

Mexico, with its almost perfect climate in the mountainous regions, its beautiful and modern capital, its luxurious resorts, its quaint and colorful Indian villages, its ancient ruins and historic churches, is a "tourist paradise" for wealthy Americans in search of new thrills.

Aside from the many teachers, students and businessmen, who regularly visit Mexico with more serious intent, most of the tourist traffic will unquestionably continue to come from the idle and well-to-do.

But there are forward-looking elements in Mexico's progressive and labor-supported administration, as well as in the labor movement there, who are thinking in other than dollar terms and hoping to attract more representative American visitors than the idle or profit-hungry rich.

One of their fondest hopes is that Mexico will be "discovered" by American labor, and that the inter-change of union visitors between our two countries will lead to better understanding and closer friendship between our two peoples.

Mexico, of course is close enough to the southern parts of the United States, and costs are low enough outside of hotels and resorts catering to rich Americans, to make possible occasional vacation visits from American workers who do not have too far to travel. But obviously, distance and expense will continue to prevent any considerable tourist traffice on the part of American unionists.

A NUMBER of different ideas are therefore being promoted to bring more labor visitors to Mexico. One of these ideas, in which Potofsky has displayed much interest, is union-conducted low-cost tours similar to those arranged in many European countries by labor tourist associations.

Such tours would include not only sightseeing but also an opportunity to associate with Mexican fellow-unionists and to see something of the real workaday Mexico which most tourists miss.

Another idea involves the exchange of labor students. In Mexico City there is a Workers' University, housed in a large but old building in the center of the city and directed by Humberto Lombardo Toledano, brother of Vicente Lombardo Toledano, who is well known in the United States as president of the Confederation of Workers of Latin America (CTAL) and a leader of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

While the Workers University is labor-run it is also part of the national educational system. Its 1,240 Mexican students, mostly workers and trade unionists, are thus enabled to attend its evening classes for no more than a small token registration fee of less than an American quarter. But this year about a thousand foreigners, most of them from the United States, also attended classes at the Workers University, chiefly for the purpose of learning Spanish.

The hope has been expressed that arrangements may be worked out with United States unions and labor schools for scholarships under which selected American trade unionists may attend special classes at this and other Mexican educational institutions, to study labor questions in that country.

YET another idea advanced is an invitation to American unions in the Southwest to hold conventions or other gatherings in nearby Mexican cities.

The Mexican representative in the United States who is chiefly interested in all such arrangements is Guillermo Hawley, U. S. public relations director, Mexican Govt. Tourist Dept., 201 N. Wells St., Chicago, Ill.

Behind the attendance of CIO representatives at the Aleman inauguration, and the strong Mexican interest in closer relations with American labor, is a fascinating story of Mexico's revolutionary traditions and present efforts to industrialize and raise its living standards without becoming subject to American monopoly capitalists or any other form of imperialistic interference; a story of the strength of the Mexican labor movement and its influence in the government and national institutions; a story of how the Mexican working and common people look to American labor, and particularly the CIO, as their natural ally in resisting exploitation by American capital and in their struggle to improve conditions which may otherwise prove a drag on labor conditions in the United States.

Following articles in this series will tell some of this story, recording first-hand impressions of the Mexican labor movement and the part it plays in the national life, and of the cordial relations established between the CIO and the CTM and CTAL.

HANDS ACROSS THE BORDER: CIO's popularity with Mexican labor was evidenced by the invitation for CIO representatives to attend the inauguration of Mexico's new labor-supported President, Miguel Aleman. Here the CIO leaders are being entertained at a luncheon in Mexico City given jointly by the CTM (Mexico's national labor organization) and the CTAL (Latin-American labor confederation). REVEALS PLIGHT OF WOMEN NOW IN GREEK PRISONS

"They tortured us with the most medieval methods. When they seized me they beat me till I was spitting blood. They broke my ear-drums . . . They imprisoned me on numerous occasions for crimes I had supposedly committed during the occupation and which they themselves had committed."

These are the words, not of a man held in a Hitler concentration camp during the war, but of an 18-year-old Greek girl at present in the Women's Prison in Athens, Greece. Her plight and that of other women and children political prisoners was revealed in a letter smuggled out of the Themistockleous prison a short time ago by an American visitor. It was released by the American Relief for Greek Democracy, 111 West 42 St., New York 18, N. Y.

The first American relief packages to reach women political prisoners in Greece were recently delivered to the Women's Prison according to a cable received in New York by CARE (Cooperative of American Remittances for Europe.)

Robert St. John, Co-chairman of American Relief for Greek Democracy, announced that additional shipments will be made to women political prisoners and their children.

"CARE has done a magnificent job of delivering this first shipment to political prisoners," he said. "It is the first time this has been accomplished by an American organization in Greece. With the help of CARE we hope to reach all women and children held in political prisons."

MANUFACTURING LABOR NOW 19% VETERANS

The importance of veterans to the manufacturing labor force was underscored in a Bureau of Labor Statistics reports showing war veterans were almost 19% of all manufacturing employes in September.

Ex-GIs were 22.7% of all durable goods workers, and 14.5% in the nondurable field. Automobile manufacturing continued to lead the list with a 28.5% veteran labor force.

ART FOR THE HOME

ART LOVERS may be able to borrow money to purchase modern American paintings or sculpture under a new plan announced by Pres. Michael M. Nisselson of the Amalgamated Bank of N. Y., in an interview at the ACA Gallery, in New York City. The bank is an affiliate of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The ACA gallery which features American artists, is the first gallery to come under the Amalgamated Bank's plan which aims to make it possible for the average New Yorker to buy works of art.

The bank will finance at low interest rates, the purchase of a modern American art work by any responsible person by paying the gallery in full for the purchase, while the purchaser may repay the bank over a year or 18-month period.

"We feel that art fulfills almost as profound a need as hunger," Nisselson said. "At any rate, a decent life is incomplete without some excellent paintings on the walls of one's home."

It will also, he said, "widen the audience for living American painters and sculptors. Their creative productions will be more quickly bought, giving them material as well as spiritual encouragement to work and grow. Perhaps the dream of both fame and security can be achieved in the artist's life-time."

The bank's plan, Nisselson said, is in keeping with sound banking practice, as the lover of art is as good a potential risk as the person who wants a loan for a small business, or to pay his medical bills or other debts.

"What we are seeking to do," he declared, "is to enlarge the horizons. We believe in an ever-higher standard of living for Americans. Art at its best is part of that standard."

Book Review

A MODERN EXODUS

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IF you find it hard to understand the yearning of the Jewish people for a homeland of their own, read I. F. Stone's new book, "Underground to Palestine" and it will open your eyes.

So many amazing and terrible things have happened in our time that most of us have grown tired emotionally and fail to realize that the world torn to pieces by the war is now being made over by some of the most exciting events the human race has ever experienced.

I. F. STONE

One of these is the determined efforts of the refugee Jews in Europe to make their way underground to the Holy Land in spite of heartbreaking obstacles, in the greatest migration of these tragic people in history.

To tell their story at first hand, Stone, on assignment from the newspaper PM, flew to England in May 1946, taking with him contacts given him by officials of Haganah, the Jewish people's militia of Palestine. He was the first newspaper man ever permitted to travel to Palestine by the underground route.

Before he sailed for the continent to start his exciting adventures, Stone found out how little sympathy or understanding the average Englishman and the British government had for the Jewish refugees.

PROVIDED with a list of underground contacts in Germany, Austria, Czechoslovakia and Poland and a kind of passport in Hebrew identifying him as a newspaper man who could be trusted, Stone set out to visit DP (displaced persons) camps in these countries to see for himself what were the conditions behind the Jewish migrations.

It seemed ironic to Stone that into the Germany of destruction, death and dreadful memories, Jews from eastern Europe were now pouring by the hundreds of thousands to await a chance to get to Palestine.

Contrasting their spirit with the defeatism and tiredness that he felt elsewhere in Europe, Stone writes:

"These Jews out of the East who have suffered more than any other people in the war in terms of sheer numbers slain, who returned to find themselves without home or family, have a will to live and a will to build that are wonderful to see."

THE big news he has to tell about them is not that they have suffered. "That is an old story, grown weary in the re-telling, he says. "The real news is that so many of these people came across the border with tremendous vitality, with spirits unbroken."

One of the things that moves Stone deeply are the songs he hears the refugees sing, some evoking memories of a Jewish life gone forever, others, composed in concentration camps, mourning for lost homes, children and parents.

There are times when Stone fears he will have to return without succeeding in getting aboard a ship for the final stage of his journey to Palestine.

Tussels with Italian officials, interference of British diplomatic agents and tangles of red tape delay him and make him fume with impatience, but finally he manages to sail from an Italian port in a boat manned mostly by American Jews and crosses the Mediterranean safely.

IN summing up his impressions after his underground voyage, Stone concludes that there can be no rational solution to the Palestine problem because the British don't want to set in motion a peaceful social revolution which would "upset the potentates and pashas with whom the oil companies, British and American, do business."

The Jews themselves and those who are touched by their plight Stone feels, "must put all their money and energies into the so-called illegal immigration. The only practical thing that can be done is to buy and man ships and with those ships get the Jews out of Central and Eastern Europe."

Regional Director A. R. Hardesty of Texas and Thomas Russell, CIO Rep. in La., advise that the strike against the Lone Star Cement Corp. operations in Houston and Dallas, Texas, and New Orleans, La., has been settled, after nine weeks. A wage increase of 15c was granted. Director Hardesty expressed appreciation and thanks for the help extended to these workers by our affiliated unions.

MASSACHUSETTS CUTS BOARD

THE Massachusetts CIO Council at its convention at Worcester last week end re-elected Joseph Salerno and William Belanger, president and secretary-treasuer, respectively. Michael L. Ryan, Salvatore Camelio and Le Messier were elected vice presidents.

The number of board members was cut from 35 to 10, and the following were elected members: Hugh Brown and Ralph Arivella, Textile Workers; Jack Prager, [illegible]hing Workers; William Mc[illegible]ny, Steelworkers; John Paran, [illegible]trical, Radio & Machine [illegible]kers; Ralph Gravelese, Rubber Workers; Joseph Goyette, Shoe Workers; Francis Walsh, Auto Workers; Arthur Gildea, Brewery Workers, and Thomas Leone, Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers.

Constitutional changes include the clause, "no member of the Communist Party or of Communist, Nazi or Fascist organization shall be eligible for election or appointment to any office or hold any office in the Mass. State CIO."

The speakers included Gov. Tobin, Sen. Saltonstall, Commissioner of Labor Moriarty, CIO Vice President and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood.

In New Jersey

URGE UNITY TO MEET FOES

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the ninth annual convention of the New Jersey CIO Council last weekend that the labor movement in the U. S. "is faced with a life-and-death struggle."

Carey told the delegates to stop bickering and "see to it that we continue to enjoy democracy in this country." John Brophy, Natl. CIO Council director, also called for unity.

The convention pledged support to the Newspaper Guild's strike against the Camden Courier and Post and the Philadelphia Record, and urged President Truman to maintain rent ceilings "at their present levels."

After debate the council resolved to "resist and fight, in democratic fashion, all attempts of the Communist party and its adherents in and out of the CIO to foist their policies on our organization."

Carl Holderman and Peter J. Flynn were reelected president and secretary-treasurer respectively.

CONN. BARS INTERFERENCE

By HAROLD SENIOR

FOLLOWING the lead of the Natl. CIO, 400 delegates to the Connecticut IUC's ninth annual convention in Hartford last weekend went on record to "reject efforts of the Communist party or other political parties and their adherents to interfere in the affairs of the CIO."

The convention amended the constitution to increase the per capita tax from two to three cents.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers called for united action by all organized labor to defeat the anti-labor forces. He declared that unless the nation adjusted itself economically to put more of the proceeds of production into the pay enevelopes of the workers, "we are hell-bent for a depression." Reuther urged a labor-industry conference to deal with present iniquities.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of oragnization, lashed out "at government by injunction," declaring that efforts to crush labor by harsh court action or repressive laws would not succeed.

But he warned that the CIO, to keep itself effective against its enemies outside, must take a strong position against enemies working on the inside. He made several references to the Communist Party in his talk.

Frank Fernbach, Natl. CIO representative, urged support of the bill to set up national labor extension service.

Pres. Edward Lavery and Sec.-Treas. John J. Driscoll were re-elected. Six new vice presidents were elected, Joseph Falcone and Frederick Rubelmann, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; Gerhardt Kirschner, Auto Workers; Charles Valentine, Rubber Workers, and Charles Klimkowski, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and Edward Collins, Rubber Workers.

Mrs. Eva Hudak, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, and John J. Sullivan, Auto Workers, were elected to the board of trustees.

THOUSAND COPS FIGHT FOR CHALMERS SCABS

By ESTHER HANDLER

FIFTY-SIX pickets, including the president of Seaman Body Local 75 of the CIO Auto Workers, were charged with unlawful assembly and riot this week at West Allis, Wis., after spending 48 hours in jail following a demonstration at the Allis-Chalmers plant.

Released on bonds ranging from $1,000 to $2,500, these pickets will face trial some time in January along with more than 100 others arrested in previous demonstrations.

Arrests followed a bloody half-hour battle at Hawley Road gates set off when 1000 officers drove a flying wedge into picket lines to permit scabs to leave. Fists and blackjacks flew as pickets and cops battled man to man in worst melee since the strike began.

Four scab-driven cars were overturned when drivers deliberately attempted to run down strikers and sympathizers. Two of the cars caught fire after occupants fled. The signal was given by officer when it appeared scabs were doomed to spend night in plant. From then on everything went.

Several pickets were painfully hurt when shoved under wheels of scab's cars. During one tense moment a police sergeant forced lines open at point of gun.

When the battle died down deputies made systematic raid on lines, nabbing at random some 71 demonstrators. Fifteen were later released.

Many pickets showed evidence of police brutality. One, Emil Vukodinovich, 24-year-old steelworker from Harnishfeger Plant and a war veteran, was so badly beaten he required hospitalization. He suffered deep gashes in head, black eye and badly bruised jaw.

Vukodinovich reported being picked up while walking alone on a sidewalk after a parade of pickets following the riot. He said that about ten cops dragged him to a parking lot and beat him. During the attack he said, one cop shouted "kill him kill him." The only reason he could give for the wanton attack was "reprisal" for the courageous fight put on earlier by the pickets.

Following the bloody battle, both Mayor Klenz of West Allis and Milwaukee's police chief Polcyn called upon Governor Goodland to send State guards. Upon assurance of Sheriff Hanley that his present force of over 1500 "peace" officers are adequate to handle situation, the Governor refused to resort to use of troops.

With ratification of an agreement by A-C workers at Boston, Mass., plant, West Allis is last of seven striking locals to remain out. The Boston agreement, concluded with the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, calls for 13½c an hour wage increase, wage reopener clause and some improvements in grievance setup.

TRY TO BAR NLRB IN ALABAMA

ALONG search by NLRB officials for a hearing hall in Alabama during which the doors of four meeting places were slammed in their faces, ended late this week at the CIO Textile Workers hall in Alexander City.

Before a meeting place was found, John W. Edelman, TWUA's Washington representative, called on President Truman to have the Army erect emergency facilities for the hearing.

It all started some time ago when the CIO Textile Workers began signing up employes of the Russell Manufacturing Co., Alexander City, Ala.

The Russells decided to fight unionization of their workers. TWUA filed unfair labor practice charges, claiming among other things, that the company fired a number of employes because of their union activities.

NLRB decided to hold a hearing on the charges and asked for use of the city hall at Alexander City, where the mayor is the uncle of the head of the Russell firm.

The board was told it couldn't use the city hall because of the coal shortage it might be too cold for the witnesses. The board then asked the Disabled American Veterans for use of the DAV hall and was told "OK." But the "OK" was changed to "no" before the hearing began.

NLRB finally began taking testimony last week at Ann Jordan Lodge, property of the University of Alabama, about seven miles from Alexander City. Several days later the board was told the lodge would no longer be available for the hearing. NLRB moved to a night club about four miles from the town and the taking of testimony continued.

A representative of the club told the Board his lease would be cancelled if he permitted the hearing to continue at his place.

The next move was a long one—to the Federal District Court room at Opelike, Ala., about 50 miles from Alexander City, but that site was abandoned because it was too far for the witnesses.

FURNITURE UNION ELECTS PIZER

THE General Executive Board of the CIO Furniture Workers this week announced the election of Morris Pizer, present acting president, as president for the unexpired term ending June, 1948.

A referendum vote of the membership was held to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Morris Muster.

Michael De Cicco, manager of the 5000-member Local 76B, was elected vice president for the Eastern Region, filling the position formerly held by Pizer.

After hearing Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, the board voted financial and organizational support for PAC and adopted a program to involve its local unions and districts in local PAC activity.

The board's negotiating committee reported that agreement was reached with the CIO Woodworkers on a number of points in connection with the amalgamation of the two unions. The board instructed its committee to continue conferences with IWA representatives on the remaining points.

TOMORROW'S CITIZENS — By Rose H. Alschuler

ALL SET FOR CHRISTMAS?

Only a short time 'til Christmas! How gaily the children keep track. They can hardly wait. And if we are smart we won't wait much longer either to get every last purchase made, every last package tied up. It's practical to have all Christmas preparations made by Dec. 21 because then you spare yourself last minute fatigue and can join in the merrymaking with real spirit. On the great day itself a rested mother can really enjoy the children's fun.

WOMEN AT WORK

The number of women in the nation's total civilian labor force declined by about one and one-third million between October, 1945, and October, 1946, reports the U. S. Women's Bureau. Census Bureau figures for Oct. 1946, show 16,760,000 women employed, or 29.2 per cent of the total working force of 57,360,000.

* * *

In June, 1946, women formed 38.6 per cent of all workers in Germany, as compared with 35.9 per cent in 1925. In Berlin there are 170 women for every 100 men. Two-thirds of the students at the University of Berlin are women.

* * *

Married women may now be employed under British Civil Service as the result of action taken by the House of Commons Oct. 15 letting down the bars against wives. The move was hailed by women's organizations in England and the hope expressed that private employers will fall into line with the government.

* * *

Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony orchestra in Washington, has announced that 15 women, out of a total of 100 musicians, will be members of his orchestra this winter. He said women served well when they were badly needed during the war years, but will remain on the merit of their fine playing.

In contrast, is Sir Thomas Beecham, noted British conductor, who prefers not to have them because he claims they are a distracting influence in an orchestra.

Trimming The Tree

FUN FOR ALL THE FAMILY

By M. Louise C. Hastings

TRUE indeed is the saying, "Doing things together is one of the secrets of a happy home life." At the Christmas season this is particularly important to remember. For instance, the entire family should have a part in selecting and trimming the Christmas tree —every member, from the youngest to the oldest.

It is great fun, of course, to go to the woods, cut down the tree and bring it home. Not without delight, too, is buying the tree together and conveying it home from the store. However, before doing either, perhaps the family would like thoughtfully to consider whether they want to be one of the 20,000,000 families who every year destroy, or cause to be destroyed, 20,000,000 of their country's young trees just for a few hours of pleasure. There are better ways of celebrating Christmas.

DECORATING a living tree or shrub that grows near the home graces it with happy memories that are supplemented year by year. If this plan is impossible, there is always the artificial tree at one's disposal. These are not expensive and they can be folded up and kept from year to year. Some families make their own trees by tying cross pieces firmly to a tall stick and covering the framework with green paper.

Naturally, you would let the children make at least some of the trimmings for the tree. Last year I heard a little girl remark, "We made Christmas this year." This meant that the family had made the trimmings with which they had decorated the tree. When I was a child I strung popcorn and cranberries and made paper chains. There are children who are doing the very same today. If no colored paper is available, children will enjoy crayoning some paper before they make the chains.

IN case tiny table trees are to be trimmed, holly, black alder, or wintergreen berries are suitable in size for stringing. Even pretty little buttons, placed back to back, and beads—either singly or in groups of two, three, or five —make attractive ornaments if appropriate colored ribbon or green cord is used for combining and looping. The meats can be taken out of English walnuts and the shells filled with little gifts. Then the halves should be glued together and the nut painted with gold paint or in contrasting colors to the tree decorations.

"Making Christmas" in the home leaves memories that grow very precious as the years move along.

CLEARANCE SALES

By HANNA SHERMAN

WELL it's happened. The department stores are crowded with people doing their holiday shopping. But you'll find considerable quiet in the ready-to-wear sections of your favorite store.

The reason—you've resisted the high prices and nature has helped along with a late winter this year. Result—a surplus of dresses, coats, suits, hats and accessories offered for clearance. Most of these items were priced at a very high level at the beginning of the season.

Now many stores have found it wise to take their greatest mark downs in prices since before the war. With careful shopping you can get some very good bargains at current clearance sales. And this should be true for some time to come.

LET'S take a look at the marked down merchandise. You'll find many attractive garments in the assortment. Here are some of the reasons (other than consumer resistance and the late season) why they were reduced. For example a costume which might be very popular next year may have failed to take the public's fancy this season.

The same might be true of a new color. However, this particular style and color may be just what you fashion-conscious girls would love to own.

Oftentimes too, clothes that are marked down by the store have been incorrectly sized by the manufacturer. Sometimes a size 12 model will fit a size 16. And what is more often true in these times of fabric shortages: a size 12 girl may choose a size 16 dress from a clearance rack and be perfectly fitted.

So shop around and try on various sizes before you decide that there is nothing on the racks for you. False vanity about the size you wear may be costly.

ACCESSORIES too have felt the nation-wide price slash and are being sold at a very much lower price than they were at the beginning of the season. This might be just the time to buy that evening sweater you've always wanted, an interesting piece of costume jewelry or the hat made by a designer that you thought you could never afford.

Let the buyer beware—here as always—of the costume that is not really becoming and the costume that needs a complete new set of accessories before it can be worn.

No matter how inexpensive, be sure that the garments you buy are not stretched out of shape, worn looking or badly damaged. And no matter what the price, it's never a bargain if you don't really need it.

country have a better understanding of what the conomic situation really is."

THE reaction of one section of the "public"—the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the Automobile Manufacturers Assn.—was volubly painful.

An NAM spokesman threatened that NAM economists would "tear it apart" and the auto industry wailed that wage increases would force up prices.

This was disputed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW-CIO who said that direct labor costs of the auto industry comprise on the average only 25% of the selling price of cars Reuther said that the 23.5c increase demanded by the union is necessary to offset the 18% rise in living costs since last January.

The UAW Board will conclude its N. Y. meeting in time to participate with Steel and UE in the Pittsburgh wage parley.

This will be followed by Steelworkers Executive Board meeting Dec. 18 and 19. UE's Executive Board will meet in Pittsburgh, Dec. 17 and 18.

Wage demands of both unions will be considered, and Steel at least will probaby announce what it expects from industry when basic steel contracts expire Feb. 15.

Most UE contracts can be reopened for wage discussions by next spring or earlier. Wage demands either may be put forward by the Board or by a larger wage policy meeting to be held Jan. 4-5 in N. Y. City.

CARE'S CHRISTMAS PLAN

For only $10 you can send 30 complete meals to a needy trade unionist in Europe under a plan announced by CARE (Cooperative of American Remittances for Europe).

Many CIO shops are using this plan to send CARE packages to help relieve the want of union members in ravaged European countries, instead of exchanging the usual Christmas gifts at home. CIO'ers are members of CARE through the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

Packages may be sent to Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Greece, Holland, I Norway, Poland and Germ (U. S., French, and British z and all Berlin.)

IT'S RUBY AFTER ME AGAIN, WOODY. KEEP YOUR MOUTH SHUT!

I GETCHA, JIM.

HI, JIMMY... I'VE BEEN WAITING FOR YOU. JUMP IN THE CAR...

I THOUGHT WE FINISHED OUR TALK LUNCHTIME...

NOT BY A LONG SHOT. I WANT TO HAVE A REAL TALK WITH YOU.

GEE... THAT DAME IS SURE MAKING A PLAY FOR JIM... HE AIN'T THAT HANDSOME! OR IS HE?

I AIN'T NO JUDGE OF BEAUTY — BUT I DON'T LIKE HIM GOING AROUND WITH THE BOSS' DAUGHTER!

WE GOT A UNION MEETING TONIGHT IN CLINT'S BARN— I SURE HOPE JIM DON'T SPILL NO INFORMATION INTO THAT DAME'S EAR! SHE'S POISON...

YOU DON'T HAVE TO WORRY ABOUT JIM! HE KNOWS HIS WAY AROUND WHEN IT COMES TO BATTLING FOR A UNION!

MEANWHILE...

THIS IS CLOSE ENOUGH TO KIT LINTON'S HOME, JIM. IT'S JUST AROUND THE BEND IN THE ROAD AHEAD.

OKAY, MISS CARRUTHERS... WHAT DO YOU WANT TO TALK ABOUT WITH ME?

I WANT TO CONVINCE YOU THAT YOU'RE ALL WRONG ABOUT US. I KNOW YOU HAVE TO WORK FOR A LIVING—AND I'M THE BOSS' DAUGHTER. BUT IF WE REALLY LO... LIKE EACH OTHER...

WE'RE NOT IN THE MOVIES, MISS CARRUTHERS— OR IN THE COMIC BOOKS!

THE EMPLOYER IS IN BUSINESS TO MAKE PROFITS AND GET RICHER—AND WE WORK BECAUSE WE WANT TO MAKE A LIVING FOR OURSELVES AND OUR FAMILIES. THE BOSS MAKES MORE PROFITS WHEN HE PAYS HIS HELP LESS.

MY DAD ISN'T LIKE THAT...

HE ISN'T? ARE YOU KIDDING? OR DON'T YOU REALLY KNOW? EVERY EMPLOYER IS INTERESTED IN MAKING MORE PROFITS — OTHERWISE HE WOULDN'T BE IN BUSINESS.

BUT MY DAD IS DIFFERENT! HE REALLY HAS THE INTERESTS OF THE WORKERS AT HEART! HE'S GOOD AND KIND!

WHAT A BOSS DOES HASN'T GOT ANYTHING TO DO WITH HOW GOOD AND KIND HE IS — BUSINESS IS BUSINESS! AND HIS BUSINESS IS TO MAKE PROFIT...

GIVE ME A CHANCE TO PROVE HOW WRONG YOU ARE!

OKAY... I'LL GIVE YOU A CHANCE.

I'LL HAVE TO STRING ALONG WITH HER NOW... OR SHE'LL GET WISE.

Portal-to-Portal Suits

CIO STEEL UNION ASKS $120,000,000 BACK PAY

IN its first large-scale attempt to win portal-to-portal pay for its 800,000 members, the CIO Steelworkers this week sued two U. S. Steel Corp. subsidiaries for $120 million in back pay.

The Steelworkers' suits were filed in Federal court in Pittsburgh, against the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., and the Natl. Tube Co. by CIO Counsel Lee Pressman and Atty. Charles J. Margiotti. Back pay for six years is asked for 90,000 Carnegie-Illinois employes in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio and West Virginia and 30,000 Natl. Tube workers in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Indiana.

Similar action was taken last weekend before in Cleveland, where the steel union filed suit against Republic Steel Corp. for $28 million and an equal amount in damages for about 57,000 employes in Republic plants across the country. The union in a separate suit also claimed $19 million overtime pay and a like amount in damage for 30,000 employes of the American Steel and Wire Co.

A third suit was brought in Cleveland by the CIO Auto Workers, which asked for $6,250,000 and a similar amount in damages from the Ohio Crankshaft Co.

The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, which first won establishment of the principle of portal-to-portal pay by the U. S. Supreme Court, announced it would seek to recover millions of dollars in back pay for its members. Court action already taken by IUMMSW locals against four employers involves claims of more than $15 million.

The suits marked the first broad application by CIO unions of a U. S. Supreme Court decision last June in the Mt. Clemens (Mich.) Pottery Co. case, applying the portal-to-portal principle to all types of industrial and manufacturing establishments. The court also held that back pay for such time must be paid at time-and-a-half.

URGE HIKE IN JOBLESS AID PAYMENTS

UNEMPLOYMENT insurance has helped stabilize the country's economic system during the reconversion period and has successfully met its first major test as a social insurance program, research directors of 33 CIO and AFL union declared this week.

The research experts called for expansion of the unemployment insurance program, both as an aid to workers and to help the national economy avoid critical strains during future periods of unemployment.

Inequities caused by the operation of 51 separate insurance systems were scored by the labor research officials, who pointed out that benefits varied during 1945-46 from $12.31 in North Carolina to $23.60 in Utah.

THE statement said in part:

"There are many inadequacies in the present program of unemployment insurance. We urge improvements in federal and state legislation to make the benefits more adequate, widen the coverage, extend the duration. and remove restrictive disqualification provisions.

"We express concern also over the inequities caused by the 51 different unemployment insurance systems in the 48 states, Alaska, Hawaii and the District of Columbia.

Under the present set-up, an unemployed worker receives smaller benefits in one state than he would receive if he happened to become unemployed in a different state, even though his wage credits were the same in both states. A single unified system of unemployment insurance would remove these inequities.

"The average weekly payment for unemployment during 1945-1946 was $18.81 for the country as a whole. The average varied widely among the states, ranging from $12.31 in North Carolina to $23.60 in Utah. In all cases, the amount of benefits that workers received depended largely upon how much they earned in covered employment.

"If a worker earned a low wage, his benefits were proportionately low. A large proportion of the workers drawing unemployment benefits received less than half their previous weekly earnings due to low maximum benefit ceilings in many states."

SECURITY FOR 8,000,000

The end of 1946, marking the end of 10 years of social security, will bring some 8,200,000 workers under a lifetime guarantee of old age and survivors' insurance.

A wage-earner becomes permanently insured when he has spent 10 years in employment covered by the Social Security Act. Upon retirement at the age of 65 or later, a fully insured person qualifies himself and his family for monthly benefits. Upon the wage earners' death, qualified members of his family may receive survivor's benefits.

The startling need for improvement of the social security system, as advocated in recent years by CIO, was highlighted, however, by statistics showing the average monthly benefits for five major types of insured persons during 1946.

Male wage earners only	$24.85
Female wage earners only	19.85
Wage earner and wife	38.00
Widow, age 65 or over, only	20.15
One child, only	12.40

At the present time 710,000 retired persons are drawing benefits; 8,200,000 have gained permanent protection when they reach the eligible age; 26,800,000 have temporary retirement protection for themselves and survivors' aid for their families, and 7,700,000 qualify for retirement protection without the survivors' aid.

DISCUSS UTILITY 'PEACE'

Under the specious plea that they did not want to influence Congress in any way on pending labor legislation, utility management representatives this week succeeded in substantially altering a proposed statement on a "peace" conference they held with CIO and AFL unions in Washington.

The conference was sponsored by the conciliation service of the U. S. Labor Dept.

The statement, issued jointly, said in essence that management and labor recognized their responsibility to the public and that discussions would be continued.

Deleted from the statement, which was the sole product of the conference, was the assertion: "The industries concerned wish to maintain a good record and all parties have agreed to continue their efforts to effect a peaceful settlement of the questions that may arise."

Management, wanting Congress to enact restrictive labor legislation, therefore objected to the reference to the over-all good record of industrial peace in the utility field.

CIO unions were represented by Pres. Joseph Fisher of the Utility Workers; Harry Sacher, attorney for the Transport Workers, and Martin Wagner and Charles Doyle, president and vice-president respectively of the Chemical Workers.

Anti-Union Charges Set New Record

WHAT labor can expect from management is shown by the October report of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, issued this week.

More charges of unfair labor practices were filed in October than in any other month in the past eight years.

Of the 566 charges of unfair labor practices received, 64% of them—or 305 cases—were allegations of discrimination against union activity or membership. The next most numerous charge, made in 144 cases, alleged failure to bargain.

CIO affiliates filed 690 cases, 402 of them petitions for elections and 288 of them charges of unfair labor practices by employers.

Where workers were given the chance in elections to choose between the CIO and the AFL, most of them chose the CIO. The CIO won 39 of 87 such elections, the AFL 31, and "no union" 13, with the results indeterminate in four cases.

Even more impressive was the number of votes cast for the CIO. The CIO received 5,342, the AFL 3,759 and "no union" 1,584.

Handicapped by lack of sufficient personnel because of Congressianl slashing of its appropriation, the board had a backlog of 5,552 cases at the end of October, an increase of 54% over the number of cases pending a year ago.

Even with its limited staff, the board conducted 726 elections in October, the highest in its 11-year history.

HAIL MURRAY PLAN FOR LABOR UNITY

The labor unity urged by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in support of the mine workers has brought widespread favorable comment.

Murray's warning that the use of the outlawed injunction against the mine union was the opening gun in reaction's current anti-labor drive was seconded by all top officials of the CIO Auto Workers Union.

"The government's employment of injunctive powers against the United Mine Workers of America in this case is an attempt to return to the repressive measures employed against labor 50 years ago," a join statement said.

UAW-CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, in a speech at Milwaukee, called for an immediate conference representing CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhood and bona fide independent unions, in line with Pres. Murray's proposal for united labor action.

The CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers condemned the use of injunctions, with UE declaring that "the U. S. government has aligned itself against the miners and their families."

Among CIO Council and various local union actions on the mine case were those of the Wayne County (Detroit) CIO, the northern Washington District Council of the CIO Woodworkers, the San Francisco CIO, and the Joint Board of Fur Dressers & Dyers Unions (CIO) in N. Y. City.

The San Francisco Council CIO supported "to the hilt" Pres. Murray's recommendation for labor unity and warned:

"Petty differences, organizational strife, must be laid aside. The fundamental rights of labor are in danger."

PLAN MERGER

Creation of a nationwide independent citizens organization will be considered at a joint national membership convention of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee and the Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences & Professions December 28-29 at the Hotel Commodore in N. Y. City.

Frank Kingdon and Jo Davidson, chairmen of the respective committees, said that subcommittees of both groups have been meeting to explore possibilities of forming a new and larger organization into which NCPAC and ICCASP and many state-wide independent groups may merge.

OUTLAW KKK

A state charter granted to the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan of Wisconsin in 1925 was revoked in county circuit court last week on the request of the attorney general.

The court found that the organization was formed "for no lawful purpose and stands only for principles which are un-American, undemocratic and contrary to the letter and spirit of the constitution and laws of the state of Wisconsin and the United States of America."

MOVE PAC TO CAPITAL

THE CIO Political Action Committee headquarters will move from New York to Washington "in a matter of weeks," PAC Director Jack Kroll announced over the weekend.

Kroll said the move to Washington was in line with the decision to concentrate practically all PAC activity in the field, "to build stronger PAC organizations for the struggles that lie ahead."

In accordance with this decision, Kroll said that a great deal of the work carried on by the national office would be curtailed and approximately ten members of the clerical force let go.

Regarding the move to Washington, Kroll told all PAC field units: "Since Washington is the central point of CIO activity, we feel that our contact with CIO international unions and other groups could best be furthered by being located in Washington."

Kroll emphasized that the decisions should not be interpreted as a retrenchment.

"The recent CIO convention called for intensification of political action within the CIO and for cooperation with other organizations in furthering progressive political action. It is our conviction that this can be carried through by strengthening our field operations."

CIO OPENS DRIVE TO BOOST U. S. STANDARD OF LIVING

See Pages 2, 3, & 4

Heads of CIO's "Big 3" unions met this week in Pittsburgh to clear opinions on the coming wage drive. L. to r.: Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Philip Murray, Steelworkers and CIO; and Walter P. Reuther, Auto. Murray emphasized that each union would press its individual demands for pay raises from enormous business profit, to meet the rising cost of living. Details—page 3.

IN EMPLOYMENT

It's the 'Full' That's a Bother!

A REPORT which dismissed a potential depression as an "economic dip" and which recommended little positive government action to prevent a crash was accepted this week by Pres. Truman.

The report was presented by the Council of Economic Advisers, which plans to make detailed suggestions in a second report. The Council was set up under the Employment Act of 1946 which started out as the so-called FULL Employment Bill. Congress deleted the "full" and the Council's report indicated that its members were aware of the policy.

Although the report contained few positive recommendations to help guarantee full employment, another report due in January is slated to make more detailed suggestions to Truman. The President is expected to use these recommendations in presenting his economic program to Congress.

The Council suggested that "the impediments to prosperity in the near future are of the sort that must be worked out without benefit of direct government intervention, through the practical wisdom of management and labor, farmers and financiers."

A key to the tenor of the current report was the statement that the Employment Act avoided "the vague—and in some quarters alarming—use of the term 'full employment,'"

A sample of the generalities contained in it followed a statement that the three Council members—Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, Leon Keyserling and John D. Clark—believe in the basic purposes of the Act. They added:

"We believe its broad enabling powers provide a device through which practical action can be suited to the demands of changing circumstances.

"In our judgment, too, there has come to be a broader understanding of the basic relationships among production, purchasing power, and employment, and an actionable degree of willingness to meet the requirements of better sustained general prosperity in the future."

THE report divided business theory about depressions into two camps—the Spartan and the Roman. The Spartan theory was dog-eat-dog and the Roman theory was "bread and circuses," provided by the state.

The Council said the situation is far more complicated, and described itself as being in between the two theories.

As to what to do to prevent a depression, the Council report again dealt in generalities which boiled down essentially to this policy:

"Calm judgment must be exercised not to rush in fussily, ministering to small and temporary disturbances that would right themselves sooner and better if left to themselves. On the other hand, carelessness or ignorance must not keep government from detecting serious symptoms promptly and initiating corrective measures with skill and decisiveness."

While dismissing threats of a recession in 1947 as a possible "brief dip," the report added that prosperity might not continue indefinitely.

However, it admitted no fears like that expressed by CIO Pres. Murray, that "industry's insatiable appetite for profits has brought a redistribution in our national income which, if permitted to continue, will reduce purchasing power and cause mass unemployment."

Murray's warning was contained in a long list of economic suggestions (reported in last week's CIO NEWS) which were forwarded to the Council, with the hope that some of the specific recommendations would be utilized in connection with the action report which the Council is scheduled to submit to Pres. Truman in January.

2ND BIG PACKER BOOSTS WAGES

GENERAL wage increases ranging from 7½c to 17c an hour and averaging 15c were included in the contract reached this week with Wilson & Co. by the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

The terms of the Wilson agreement are similar to those recently signed by the union and Cudahy Packing Co.

A proposed agreement with Swift & Co. with similar terms was referred to the local UPWA-CIO unions in the Swift chain for ratification.

This leaves Armour as the remaining company in the Big Four which has not reached an agreement with the union.

Some 13,000 employes at seven plants of the Wilson chain are covered by the contract, which includes a statement of policy recognizing the "desirability" for a guaranteed annual wage, with independent studies to be conducted by the company and union as to the "practicability" of a yearly guarantee.

The Wilson contract also eliminates geographic differentials, and provides sick leave with half pay on the basis of two weeks for each year's service, pay for eight holidays, improved grievance machinery, a minimum of 2½c an hour increase for certain classifications of women workers, increased night work premiums, consideration of overtime in determining vacation pay, and adjustments of combination job rates.

Wage increases are retroactive to Nov. 1.

FORCED LABOR PEACE IS TYRANNY—CIO

DURING this pre-Congress season when many newspapers are featuring stories by reactionary Congressmen calling for regulations of unions, CIO Sec.-Treas James B. Carey went on the air last week to declare that such proposals are contrary to American tradition.

Carey said that "industrial peace enacted by statuary mandate, backed by police force and injunction is not peace at all—it is legalized tyranny."

"The CIO believes that industrial peace can be attained if industrial management will sit down at the negotiation table and engage in collective bargaining in good faith. This type of good faith calls for laying all the cards on the table, and when we say 'all the cards' we mean ALL of them—every last one of them."

Carey declared the American philosophy means "the right to earn the necessities of life" and "the right to determine the necessities."

"No one but the individual worker can be allowed to decide the amount and quality of his family's food, clothing and shelter, and the kind of medicine he gives his sick baby, or the extent of his children's education. These are the things for which the American workers want to bargain collectively."

In seeking these aims, Carey asserted, the CIO "refuses to subscribe to the false industrial peace of economic dictatorship."

Carey spoke on the Columbia System's School of the Air.

ELECTION PROBE

A public hearing by Congressional committees investigating election conditions in Rep. Vito Marcantonio's N. Y. City district was demanded this week by the N. Y. City CIO Council.

The Council condemned daily press attempts to link Marcantonio with the murder of a Republican election worker in his district, declaring that no evidence exists of any connection.

MONOPOLIST HOLLERS 'MONOPLY'

A PROGRAM designed to cut the heart out of trade union bargaining power was advanced this week by the chairman of the largest corporation in the world, Alfred P. Sloan of General Motors.

Speaking before the Boston Chamber of Commerce, Sloan called for outlawing the union shop, for prohibiting industry-wide bargaining as a "monopolistic" practice, and for barring political contributions by unions.

The corporation bigwig trotted out the story that "years ago, business, in some instances was moving toward monopolistic practices, both in form and in policy. Something was done about it," Sloan added.

His statement was in direct contrast with one made by Asst. Attorney Genl. Wendell Berge, who declared last week that the grip of monopolies was never stronger on the American people.

Berge accused those who advocated a free hand for business and tight control of labor as favoring the corporate state. He warned that such a policy would lead to the destruction of whatever economic democracy exists, and later to the death of political democracy.

SLOAN, however, urged that employers be given the right to talk freely to employes (and thus influence them against unions); that courts be granted power to review all administrative agency decisions (and thus cause endless delay and excessive legal costs); that employers be given unlimited rights by law to petition for elections (and thus allow them to nip at the beginning original organization drives at their plants).

Among his other ideas were: that strikes should be illegal for the terms of contracts; that foremen should be recognized by law as part of management; that unions should be required to put questions to a "representative proportion" of their entire membership; and that they should file public financial statements.

Practically all CIO contracts provide that there shall be no strikes for the duration of the pacts. CIO unions are democratically run, with their officers being elected either in convention or by referendum, and with issues decided at open meetings.

Three fourths of CIO unions provide for a regular financial audits by Certified Public Accountants.

HAIL UNITY PLEA

CIO Pres. Philip Murray's plea for labor unity to halt reaction was hailed by leaders of two more CIO unions this week.

They were Pres. Donald Henderson of the Food & Tobacco Workers and Douglas L. MacMahon, secretary-treasurer of the Transport Workers.

Henderson warned that "a national hysteria against all labor is being built up to greet the opening of the 80th Congress."

He said that labor—CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods—must build unity against reaction or face the possibility of retreat.

"I am urging officers and members of local unions and regional councils affiliated to the FTA to explore all possible means of achieving unity with the AFL and the Brotherhoods around a common program against reaction," Henderson declared.

Wage Policy Report

Copies of the famous "Nathan report" on wage policy are available to unions and the general public.

The 65-page booklet, prepared at the request of CIO Pres. Murray, is called "A National Wage Policy for 1947." It contains all the whys and wherefores of current economic conditions, as well as a series of over 25 graphs and tables.

Bulk orders will be sold for 25c a copy to unions and educational institutions.

To get copies (50c each for two or more) or for further information, write to: Robert R. Nathan Associates, 3 Thomas Circle, Washington, D. C., or to the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP — By YOMEN

"BUT, DARLING, YOU CAN'T BLAME EVERYTHING ON LABOR."

Embarrassing, Isn't It?

BUSINESS this week received a rude shock from one of its own publications. It was Factory, a McGraw-Hill organ, which made a survey of "what the factory worker really thinks about union behavior and industry earnings."

While the answers were obviously "loaded" when the workers had to give opinions about their individual bosses, the survey apparently secured a fairly accurate measure of workers' opinions about wages and prices in general.

Many workers hedged on opinions about bosses' and stockholders' incomes.. Most of those with opinions thought bosses and stockholders were getting too much, and they were frank in stating that:

1. Their own firms could give workers a wage increase without raising prices. The answers: 76% yes, 8% no, 16% don't know.

2. All industry could give workers wage increases without raising prices. The answers: 65% yes, 20% no, 15% don't know.

CIO WANTS PEACEFUL PAY SETTLEMENTS—MURRAY

HOPEFUL predictions of a peaceful settlement of CIO's great 1947 wage movements, and reasoned arguments on the public merits of CIO's case, featured the Pittsburgh meeting last week of leaders of the "Big Three" unions, the Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

"These three organizations, and all other CIO unions," CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the press, "have a prime interest in constructive collective bargaining that will lead to the peaceful solution of the nation's ills.

"We are looking to the coming collective bargaining conferences with the hope and belief that industry will rise to its responsibilities, through collective bargaining, by providing the necessary wage adjustments which will lead to prosperous times ahead, preserving the continuity of operations and the high production so essential to the nation's welfare."

While the Pittsburgh meeting bore witness to the close cooperation and agreement on general aims between CIO's biggest unions, Murray pointed out that it was not held "to agree on any joint set of demands," since each union determined its own demands independently.

The Big Three leaders would hold further meetings of this character from time to time, he said, but their purpose is "exchange of information and a clearing of opinions rather than the formulation of joint strategy."

MURRAY emphasized that the CIO was glad to let the public know what is discussed at such meetings. They are not like "the Waldorf-Astoria meeting of brass-hats last year, which was highly secretive in character," he said, referring to one of the past meetings between big corporation heads of different industries to plan their anti-union campaign.

The CIO president said that, in addition to the need for substantial wage increases, the three unions had "given much consideration to the institution of social insurance plans, with union-management participation in their administration," and to the question of a guaranteed annual wage, which would play a part in the negotiations of all three unions.

MURRAY declared that the Nathan report on "A National Wage Policy for 1947" constitutes "a challenge to American business." He said the report "provides certain definite guideposts for the joint consideration of the representatives of industry and the unions in collective bargaining," but that it was "over-all" in character, so that each union would have to "conform to the conditions in its own industry, developing its own floors and ceilings."

"The Nathan report," Murray said, "constitutes the first overall factual study to be presented to the American people, dealing with the various factors of our internal economy," and provides the opportunity for widespread public discussion.

"This report," he added, "presents meticulous figures on the extreme, extraordinary and extortionate profits that create an inflationary situation which may lead the country into depression.

"Many have critized the Nathan report, but none have challenged its facts—on the way wages are lagging behind the cost of living."

Murray pointed out that the Nathan Report was an independent study, though commissioned by the CIO. "Nathan," he said, "is not associated with the CIO. In fact, he does more work for big business than he ever has done for labor unions."

Attending the meeting, over which Murray presided, were David J. McDonald, Van A. Bittner, James Thimmes and Lee Pressman, for the Steelworkers; Walter Reuther, George Addes and Richard Leonard of the Auto Workers; and Albert J. Fitzgerald, Julius Emspak and James Matles of the Electrical Workers.

STEEL TALKS JAN. 15

WAGE negotiations with basic steel companies employing about half a million workers will begin approximately Jan. 15, it was announced in Pittsburgh this week by Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers.

At a press conference following meetings of the union's Executive Board and Wage Policy Committee, Murray said that steel fabricating contracts with about 1,400 firms will be extended by negotiations, pending the outcome of the basic steel wage pattern. About 400,000 workers are employed in non-basic steel.

Affirming his hopes that wage discussions could be settled peacefully without resort to strikes, Murray added that "I firmly believe the steel industry can meet our demands without increasing the price of its product."

MEANWHILE, the union released its 1947 wage policy program, calling among other things for the union shop and checkoff method of collecting dues, for a comprehensive social insurance program, and for a guaranteed annual wage.

Wage increases, the union said, should be "substantial" and all wage differentials based on geographical location should be eliminated.

Severance pay was asked for those "whose employment is terminated for any reason other than a quit or discharge from employment."

The Steelworkers called for the establishment of a social insurance program covering old age retirement benefits, life, accident, health and other forms of group insurance including medical care and hospitalization. The full cost would be paid by the industry.

The program would be administered by three trustees—one from the union, one from the company and one to be selected by mutual agreement.

A portal-to-portal clause calls for the work day to start when an employe enters company property and to stop when he leaves. Time and a half pay is asked for all Saturday work and double time for Sunday. Double time would be paid for holidays worked and straight time would be paid to those who do not work.

UAW FOR UNITY PLAN

By FRANK WINN

THE CIO Auto Workers Executive Board wound up a ten-day meeting in N. Y. City this week with a strong statement supporting the CIO wage drive and Pres. Murray's proposal for a united labor conference of CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood Unions to combat anti-labor attacks.

Earlier in the meeting the board had voted to serve a demand on the auto industry for a 23½c an hour wage increase for more than 800,000 members plus an employer-financed social security program, an old-age retirement plan and a wage equalization fund.

The board also voted to contribute $10,000 a month for the next year to the CIO Southern Organizing Campaign and $1,000 a month to the PAC.

"THE International Executive Board of the UAW-CIO reaffirms its full support fo the CIO program," the board's statement said.

"We call upon leaders of the American Federation of Labor to respond to President Murray's call for labor unity against those who would destroy the labor movement.

"In the ensuing wage negotiations, the officers of the UAW-CIO shall coordinate our efforts with those of other CIO unions in order to insure unity of action."

"HUGE profits and high prices have bitten deeply into the wages, living standards and purchasing power of the people," the Board said.

"In the midst of the most bitter housing crisis the nation has ever known, the government has washed its hands of the responsibility of providing homes for veterans

"The federal administration has turned back the clock of progress in labor relations by invoking injunctive powers against unions. At the behest of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, a reactionary Congress is formulating legislation that would outlaw legitimate and basic union activities.

The Board declared that all resources of UAW-CIO will be swung into action for victory.

The UAW-CIO also struck a blow against discrimination against Negroes in organized bowling by declaring that it would not lend its name to participation in American Bowling Congress tournaments and other activities in the 1947-48 season unless the ABC had by that time stopped its discriminatory practices. Thousands of UAW-CIO members now play in ABC-sanctioned leagues.

UE ASKS PAY PARLEYS

THE CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week called on the industry to open wage negotiations "based on proven economic facts which warrant a substantial increase for our membership." The UE has 600,000 members.

Meeting at Pittsburgh following a conference with the Steelworkers and Auto Workers, the UE Executive Board warned that continued piling up of profits, rising prices and the fall of real wages would lead to economic disaster.

At a press conference following the UE parley, it was revealed that UE already has won "down-payment" wage boosts from of from 5.5 to 12c an hour from 15 companies, bringing $8 million a year in raises to 40,000 members.

The increases are to be included in whatever additional raises are negotiated.

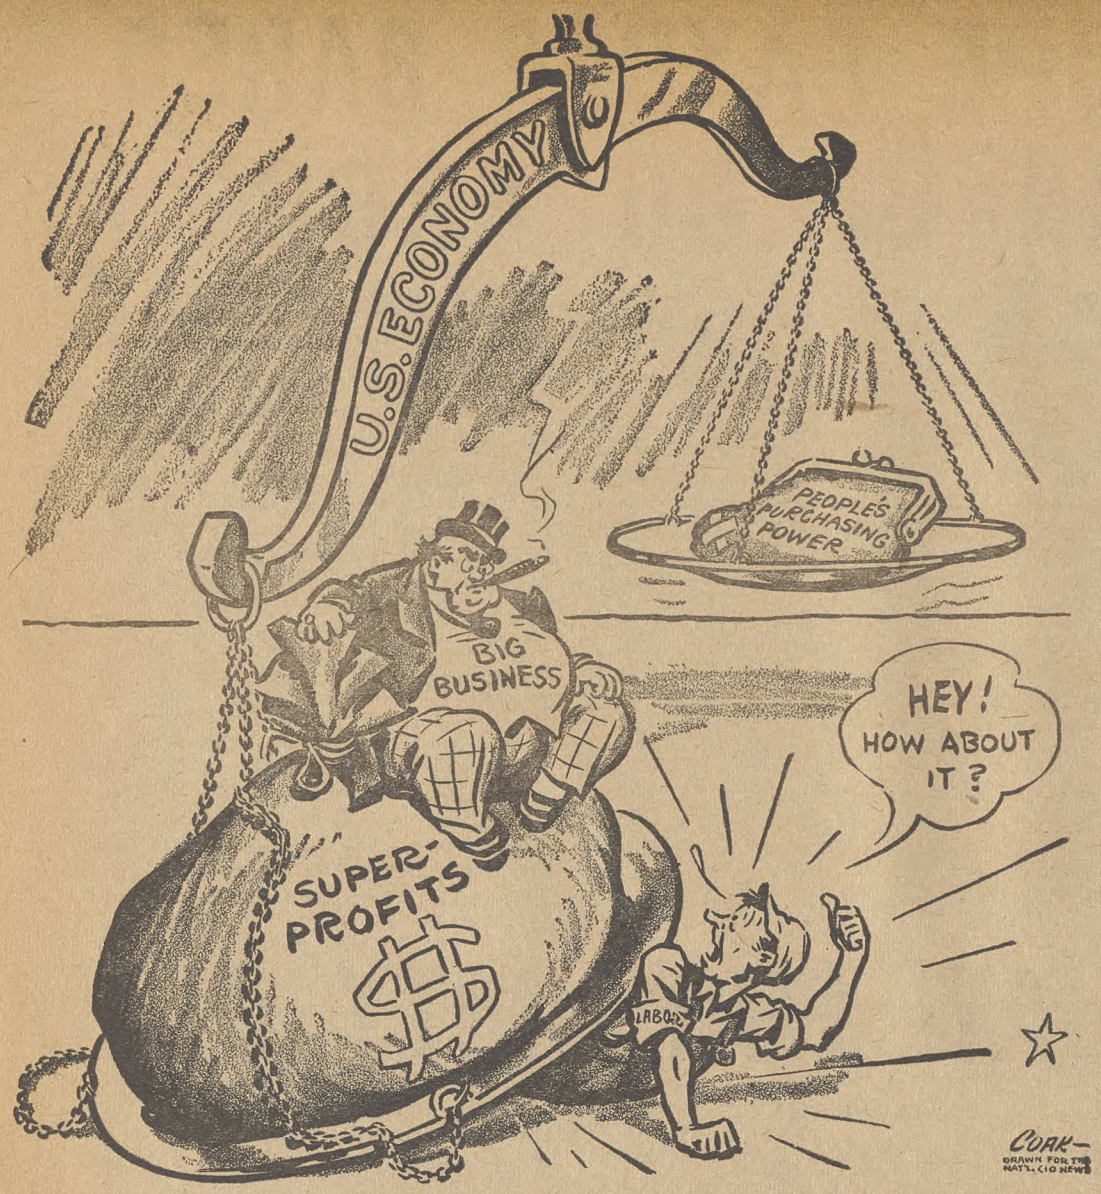
IN A UNANIMOUSLY adopted statement on wages, the Board said:

"The main problem of UE members and all other working people today is that their wages are not sufficient to maintain a decent standard of living. This is due to soaring prices and reduced incomes. Millions of workers are today going into debt, week by week, to meet regular living expenses. Millions of workers are cancelling orders for the products of their own labor, such as automibiles, refrigerators, washing machines etc.

"In contrast, American industry today is profiting at the highest rate in history. The profits of 1946 and the current and prospective profit rate for 1947 are the direct result of extortionate price levels which, while enriching the corporations, impoverish the American people.

"Continuing enrichment of the few at the expense of the majority inevitably leads to the collapse of purchasing power and production, and to unemployment.

"The General Executive Board recommends that the Conferences of union representatives of major electrical companies, representing 225,000 people, meeting January 4 and 5 in New York, give notice to these corporations of the opening of wage and contract negotiations in January. These Conference Boards will also submit contract proposals to their companies on insurance, health and retirement plans, holidays with pay, guaranteed annual pay and other contract improvements."



OUT OF BALANCE, INTO TROUBLE

IN launching its 1947 wage movements, the CIO has risen to a full sense of its public responsibilities. It has laid all its cards on the table, letting the American people know what it wants and why it wants it.

In an effort to reach a peaceful settlement through reasoned argument and with careful consideration of the public interest, the CIO has chosen to base its general case on a factual study, made by Robert R. Nathan Associates, and to invite the widest public discussion of the economic issues involved.

★ ★ ★

THE CHARTS and figures of the Nathan report show clearly an increasing lack of balance in our economy, in at least two basic respects.

In the first place, the average weekly earnings of manufacturing workers have drawn further and further apart from the "consumer price index" of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

While this index has continued to rise in the past two years, taking a particularly sharp upward turn after the scrapping of OPA, weekly earnings declined sharply in 1945 and were raised by 1946 wage increases to a far lesser extent than were prices.

In other words, wages have lagged far behind soaring living costs, and the increasing gap is now at its widest point.

★ ★ ★

THE SECOND major lack of balance in our economy, shown by the Nathan report, is between declining real wages and soaring profits.

While workers' earnings, as measured by their purchasing power, have dropped far below the level of early 1945, corporate profits after taxes have risen so sharply since the last quarter of 1945 that they are now far above the high level of early 1945.

In fact, profits after taxes are now at an all-time high, 50% higher than their war peak and 3¾ times as high as they were during the pre-war years 1936-39.

The Nathan report estimates total profits are now so high that a general 25% wage increase could be granted, without higher prices, still leaving the profit return as high as in these pre-war years.

★ ★ ★

WHILE the basic facts of the Nathan report cannot be challenged, much of the criticism of its conclusions is along these lines:

The report shows profits were sufficient in 1946 to absorb the wage increases granted without raising prices. But this didn't happen. Actually prices were raised following the wage increases. So, it is said, the same thing is liable to happen all over again in 1947.

The critics therefore argue that the CIO should not seek wage increases, but rather concentrate on reducing prices.

(1) No organization has fought harder than the CIO to keep down prices. Higher prices did not have to follow 1946 wage increases, which could have been paid out of huge profits. They were caused by the greedy power of profiteers and the destruction of price control.

(2) With price controls gone, the public power to reduce living costs to the level of current wages has disappeared. Business is unlikely to reduce prices until forced to do so by a depression. Furthermore, profits are much higher now and even more capable of absorbing wage increases. And there is a limit (already reached in many lines) beyond which prices can be increased without losing customers.

(3) In any event, the workers have no other recourse today than to demand wage increases, if they are to support their families at anything approaching an American standard of living.

(4) The lack of balance caused by the widening gap between wages and prices, and between purchasing power and profits, creates an imminent danger of economic collapse. This can only be averted by narrowing the gap through a great increase in mass purchasing power.

BY LEN DE CAUX

STOP it, fellows, you're breaking my heart.

When the Wall Street Journal starts writing sob stories about the boss who "barely manages to make ends meet on $45,000 a year," I just can't stand it.

When the NAM accuses the CIO of "ruthless propaganda," and the Chamber of Commerce complains "the dividend dollar has lost purchasing power just as truly as the wage dollar," I feel like starting a "Be Kind To The Rich Week."

★ ★ ★

DO YOU realize, fellow workers, that the cost of high living is even higher than the high cost of living?

If you think it's tough to feed and clothe your family on $39 a week, at present prices, think how much it now costs to steer a society matron and her brood through a season at Palm Beach.

Think of the wistful faces of debutantes peering through Fifth Avenue show-windows at $10,000 mink coats or $9,000 diamonds.

Put yourself in the other fellow's shoes. How would you like to be a sugar-daddy, when your "baby" reads about doubled profits and extra dividends and expects you to buy her twice as much?

★ ★ ★

LISTEN to the sad story of "Mr. X", as related by the Wall Street Journal (full text on pages 6-7), who employs some 250 workers and draws half his $45,000 income from dividends.

To provide for his wife and three children in their 14-room house, he has to give Mrs. X $1250 a month for housekeeping (as against $700 before the war). His four servants cost him $460 in monthly wages.

After meeting such bare living costs and paying taxes, Mr. X has only $10,000 left.

But out of this, he has to pay $1,300 in dues to his five clubs; $160 a month in the summer for country club "social life," with $60 a month more for golf; $1,500 for a month's family vacation each summer; and $4,000 a year for a $100,000 life insurance policy.

That leaves the poor fellow with only about $2,000 for incidentals. He's feeling the pinch terribly.

Accustomed to buy four or five $125 suits at a time, to have two cars and to winter in Palm Springs, he now pays $200 for a suit, is reduced to one Cadillac and even had to cut out Palm Springs last winter.

★ ★ ★

IF IT'S as tough as this to get by on $45,000, it must be twice as tough on $90,000, with two 14-room houses, eight servants, ten clubs, ten $200 suits at a time, and twice as high a living standard generally.

As for the plight of the millionaire, with present high costs of high living and reduced buying power of increased dividends, it must be awful.

★ ★ ★

THE PRESENT tear-jerking campaign is designed to offset the Nathan report, which showed that while real wages have dropped nearly one-fourth, profits after taxes have risen to an all-time high, sufficient to pay a general 25% wage increase, without raising prices, and still leave profits at their pre-war level.

The Wall Streeters have also been shocked into action by McGraw-Hill opinion polls showing that 65% of factory workers think industry can raise wages now without raising prices, and 76% are sure their company can.

★ ★ ★

ACTUALLY, the CIO is being kinder to the rich than it is given credit for. Its members are even willing to share some of their heavy burden.

For instance, if wages should be so increased out of profits that Mr. X and other stockholders got half their present income, he would have to pay less than half as much in taxes, could live in a 7-room house, have two instead of four servants, pay Mrs. X half as much for housekeeping, and buy half as many suits.

Thus all of Mr. X's problems would be cut in half, and he should be twice as happy.

On the other hand, the CIO can give the rich no guarantee they will be relieved of some of the burden of their wealth by raising wages without raising prices.

The chances are that profits would rise still higher on the increased volume of production resulting from increased mass purchasing power.

So, if worse comes to worst, we may have to call for CIO volunteers to change places with the rich, so the latter may enjoy for awhile the "privileged position" of workers, which their publications seem to envy so much.

Or has anyone else any ideas for my "Be Kind To The Rich Week?"

YOUR AID MEANS LIFE

RELIEF GIFTS from CIO members have helped make life a little easier for hard-pressed workers in war-disrupted Europe, it was reported last week by Tony Luchek, European representative of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

Back from a year in Europe as a supervisor of CIO relief activities, Luchek said:

"To appreciate what labor's gift to European trade unionists means, we must first realize what conditions there are like . . . To live day after day on a diet 90% of which is bread and potatoes—and those in inadeuate amounts—to be seriously ill and not to have enough clothing, those are the urgent and basic problems facing hundreds of thousands of people in Europe today."

During the past five years, American labor sent 11 million dollars to Europe for relief purposes, Luchek revealed. Some nine million were spent in the wartime period.

Those American workers' dollars helped thousands of anti-Nazis to be smuggled out of dangerous area, aided secret underground operations "more colorful than any imaginary wild west story," and made it possible for the working man and women of many countries to move a peg closer to normal living conditions.

And, Luchek made it clear, Europe knows and appreciates the assistance given by CIO through its relief committees.

CIO projects financed by CIO relief funds are operating in several European countries, although they scarcely scratch the surface of the Continent's big needs.

WORLD LABOR WINS IN UN

THE World Federation of Trade Unions—to which CIO is affiliated—won a major concession last week when the United Nations Assembly gave it the right to submit questions to the agenda of the UN's important Economic and Social Council.

Although far short of the WFTU's basic request for full non-voting privileges in the Council, the assembly's action gives world labor a medium for raising questions of importance to workers in the Council meetings.

With 67,000,000 workers in almost every country of the world, the WFTU argued that it had a special status which the UN Economic & Social Council should recognize in the interest of making its work more effective.

The WFTU plea for full rights short of voting power had been supported in the UN by delegates of the Soviet Union, France and several other countries, while the U. S. and British delegations led the opposition. Their position revolved around the contention that the UN should remain a government agency, with no non-governmental groups receiving formal status in the UN or its subsidiaries.

After the UN assembly accepted the compromise position, however, the U.S. delegation proposed similar status for the AFL, the Intl. Chamber of Commerce and the Intl. Cooperative Alliance. That proposal was also accepted.

Chinese Unionist Beaten

THE leader of the Chinese trade union organization, who was forced to flee from Shanghai to British-controlled Hong-Kong because of threats from reactionary leaders of the Kuomintang government, has been assaulted and seriously injured in that city.

Chu Hsueh-fan, victim of the assault, is president of the Chinese Assn. of Labor and a vice-president of the World Federation of Trade Unions. He has been under criticism from the Kuomintang in recent months, according to an Allied Labor News report, and fled Shanghai in order to avoid arrest by Chiang Kai-shek's police.

The personal assault on Chu, according to ALN, "is laid to Kuomintang secret police, who only recently seized all CAL properties, including hospitals and dormitories built with funds donated by CIO and AFL" workers.

Chu, who had maintained close ties to the Kuomintang throughout the war, was placed on Chiang Kai-shek's blacklist when the Chinese Assn. of Labor expressed its opposition to the civil war and to what it described as American intervention on the side of the Kuomintang.

The Chinese union leader left his country after threats which followed his refusal to expel from the CAL its affiliated unions in the Communist-controlled sections of northern China or to participate in a meeting of the Natl. Assembly, whose endorsement of Chiang Kai-shek was described by Chu as "undemocratic" and contrary to the will of the people.

DOPE PAYOFF BARED IN BILBO PROBE

A FANTASTIC story involving a $1,500 payoff from a drug addict, thousands of dollars in "contributions" from war contractors, death threats and a rumored affair with a pastor's wife was spread upon the record this week in hearings on Sen. Theodore G. Bilbo's war record.

SEN. THEODORE G. BILBO
War Contractors Wanted to Help a Poor Man

Witnesses before the Senate War Investigating Committee in Washington testified that the Mississippi polltaxer and admitted member of the Ku Klux Klan used a church as a "front" for collecting from businessmen, who gained hundreds of thousands of dollars in war contracts through his influence.

The war contractors admitted that they built Bilbo a lake, an island and a swimming pool, painted one of his "dream houses," gave him three cars (including two Cadillacs that cost then $4,200 each), and contributed thousands of dollars to the Juniper Grove Baptist Church and to Bilbo.

The 66-year-old, wrinkled senator shouted his denials over a microphone in the crowded hearing room, claiming that all he received as gifts were one Cadillac, and some living room furniture for one of his "dream houses."

The thousands of dollars the war contractors said they gave him were either campaign contributions for a political ally or loans which Bilbo has repaid or will repay, he testified.

BILBO did not say, however, what was to be done with $1,500 donated to the church by an aging Mississippi drug addict who gave his life savings for the "favor" of obtaining dope to ease his dying days.

The payment, according to federal officials who testified, was unnecessary, since physicians can obtain permission free to administer drugs to addicts who might die if denied them.

Bilbo failed to find the $1,500 contribution listed on the bank records of the fund "kept for the church," which has only 532 members.

The church, incidentally, has a parsonage which Bilbo is building, containing eight bedrooms and five baths. It adjoins Bilbo's 3,600-acre farm. Bilbo, under a complicated legal set-up, retains title to the parsonage, but declared his intention of turning it over to the congregation and the $2,600-a-year pastor next April.

DESPITE Bilbo's assertion that either the church or political henchmen were the chief gainers from contributions of war contractors, the business operators broke down their payments this way:

- $68,000 to Bilbo.
- $40,000 to Bilbo or other politicians for the unsuccessful campaign to elect Wall Doxey to the U. S. Senate.
- Thousands more, ranging from payments of $100 to $3,750, to the Juniper Grove Church.

The contractors, they said, "just happened to be passing by" and noticed that the Senator needed certain items. He was a "poor man," they declared, whom they desired to help.

Bilbo had solicited contributions for the church in a letter which ended with the assurance that donations "will be bread cast upon the waters."

THE man who testified in connection with the dope payoff was Bilbo's former secretary, Edward P. Terry, who admitted taking $15,000 from a New Yorker to be used to help defeat Bilbo. Terry, however, had difficulty convincing the Committee that the $15,000, which was not used, had been returned. He faces possible perjury action.

Terry said he testified under death threats against him and his family. He said A. B. Friend, Bilbo's campaign manager, warned him that two men in Mississippi would kill him if he aided in exposing the Senator's record.

Terry said he obtained the $15,000 fom a Simon Liberman of N. Y. City and returned it to him in July 1946 when it was not used. Liberman, however, died in January, 1946, and his son said there was no record of the estate's receiving the sum.

The pastor of the Juniper Grove Church, Rev. D. Wade Smith, was another embarrassing witness for Bilbo. Smith, who succeeded the Rev. D. W. Nix, admitted saying that he "had no idea why Sen. Bilbo erected such an elaborate parsonage and that it was entirely too large for any pastor of such a small church to keep up."

Some light on this was thrown by a Treasury Dept. tax investigator's memorandum which quoted the Rev. Smith as saying:

"Rumors were prevalent that Sen. Bilbo had been having an affair with Rev. Nix's wife and promised her that he would build a parsonage for her."

Observers at the hearing conceded that, for a "poor man," Sen. Bilbo does manage to get around.

NO CLUES!

A federal grand jury in Athens, Ga., this week reported that a three weeks' investigation of 100 witnesses had failed to yield a single clue to the lynching of four Negroes at Monroe, Ga., last July 25.

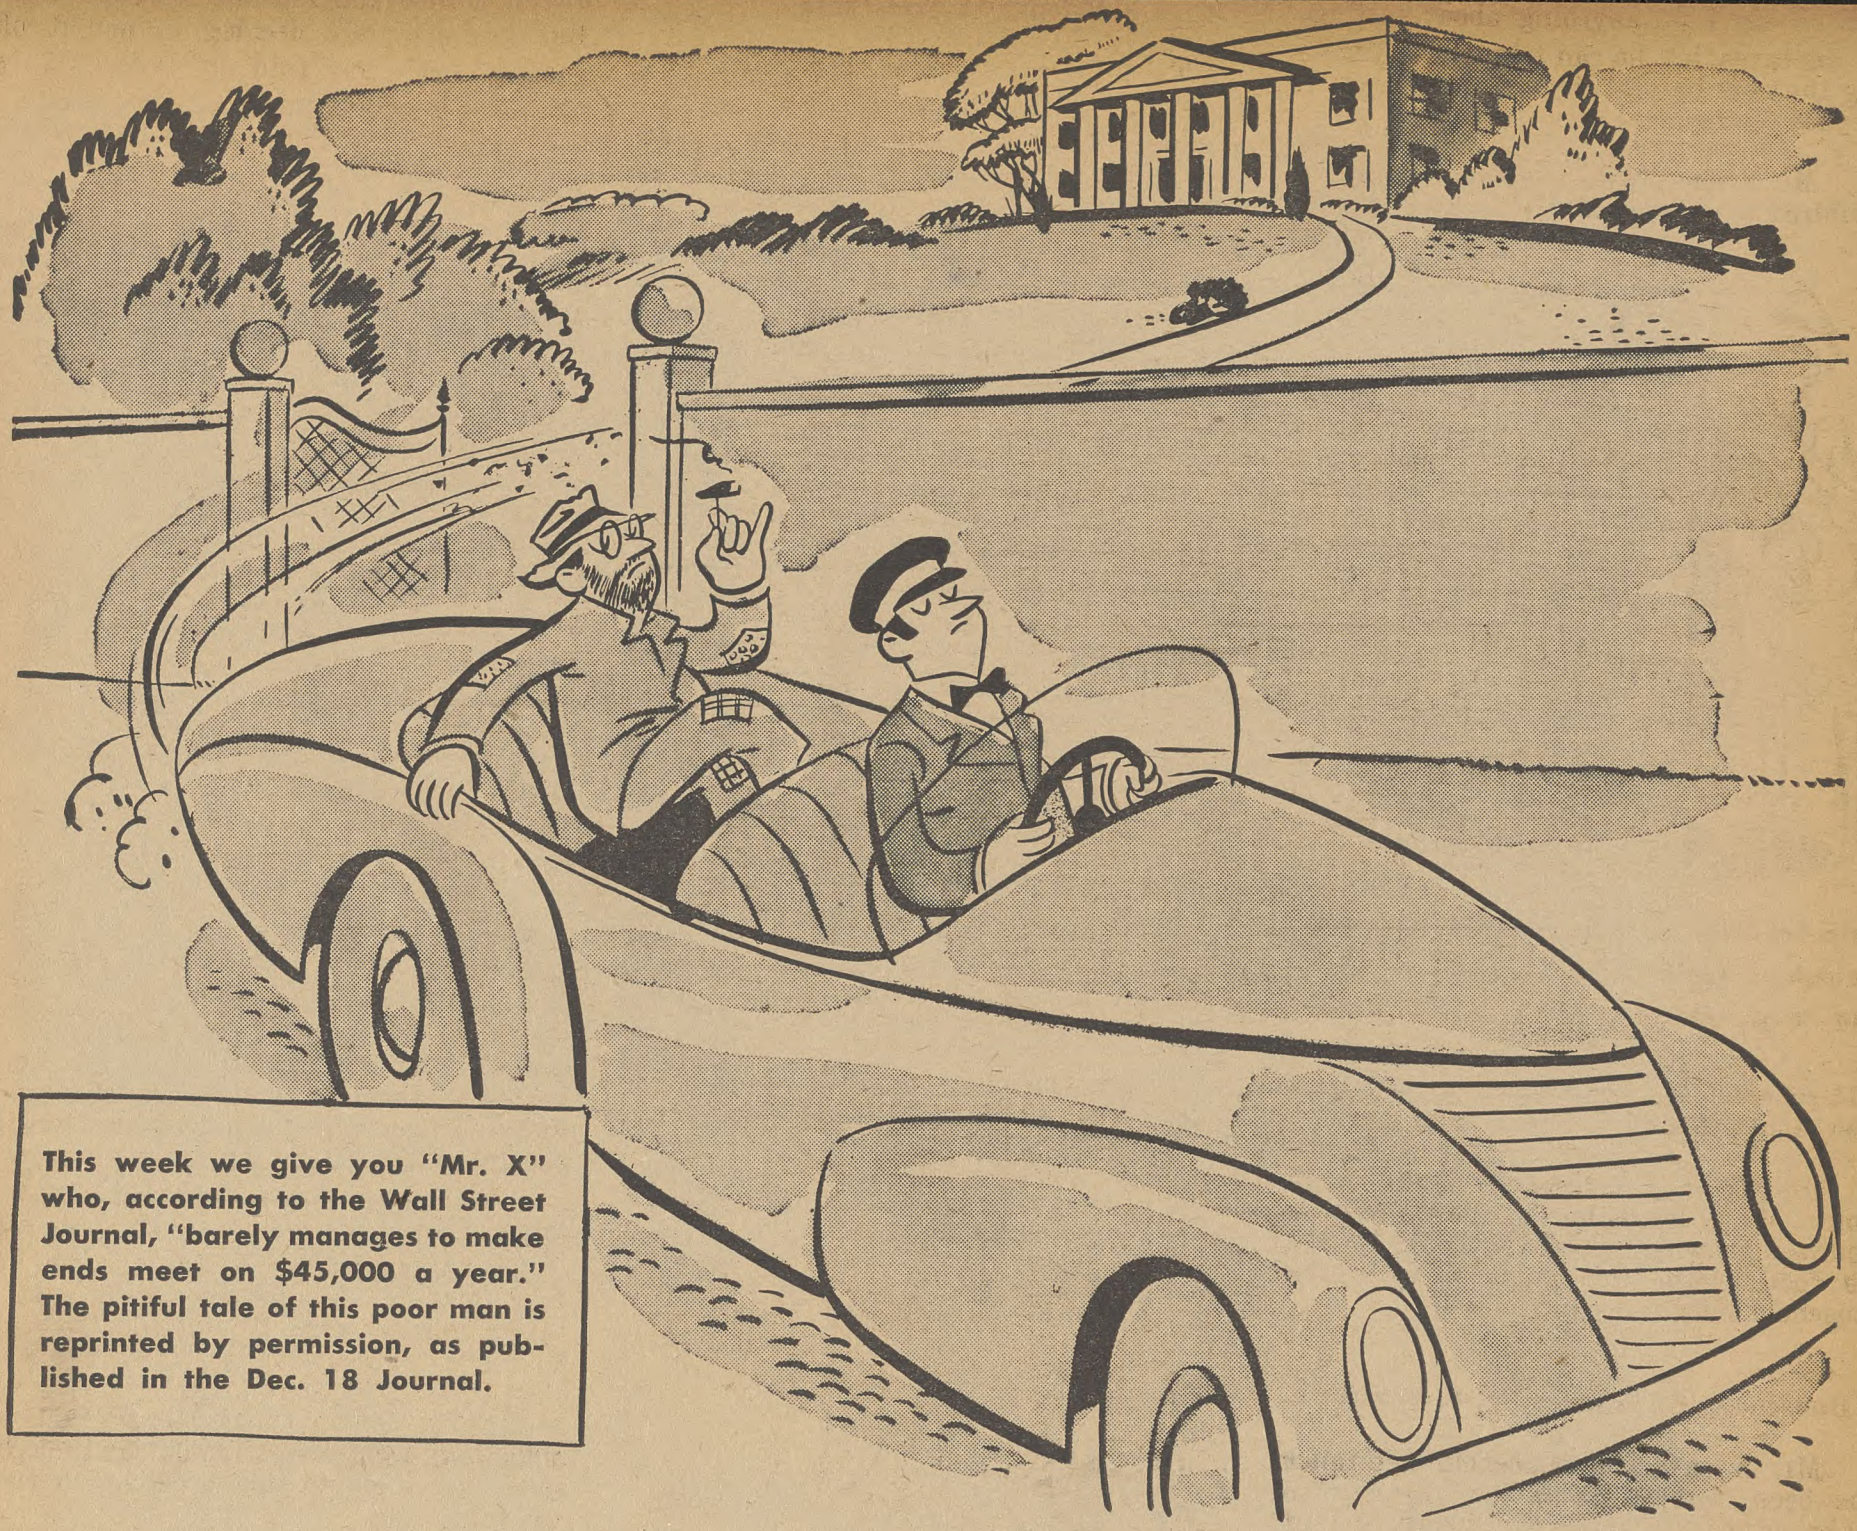
The four—Mr. and Mrs. Roger Malcolm and Mr. and Mrs. George Dorsey—were forced from a car driven by a wealthy planter and shot. The planter, Loy Harrison, testified that he was unable to identiy even one person among the 20 armed, unmasked men who committed the

Is Santa Next?

In view of some of the recent statements of the more reactionary members of Congress, the public should be prepared for the announcement by some lawmaker that he proposes to introduce a bill to make Christmas illegal.

This would not be too far a cry from the proposal of Rep. Curtis (R. Neb) that Congress make it illegal for unions to print and circulate voting records of members of Congress.

Quick to reply was Sen. Glen H. Taylor (D. Idaho) who pointed out that the Constitution guarantees freedom of the press "not only to the prosperous chain newspapers and magazines but also to the smallest pamphleteer and mimeographer." Taylor declared publication of voting records helped safeguard democracy.



This week we give you "Mr. X" who, according to the Wall Street Journal, "barely manages to make ends meet on $45,000 a year." The pitiful tale of this poor man is reprinted by permission, as published in the Dec. 18 Journal.

IT'S REALLY A TOUGH LIFE ON JUST $45,000 A YEAR!

Many people today ask: "Where does the money go?" With living costs soaring and their income taxes near the wartime high, people find they're saving less—or not at all. The story below is the first of several interviews about the personal budgetary problems of families in all income classes. The next will appear in an early issue.

By CHARLES ST. PETER

Staff Correspondent of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

SAN FRANCISCO—Mr. X has to pinch his purse these days to live in the style to which he has become accustomed.

This year Mr. X's gross income will be about $45,000. But, says he, "I am now living more frugally than at any time since I was married.

"My net is going down and when it is translated into terms of purchasing power it is not even close to what I was making 15 years ago."

Mr. X derives about half his income from his salary as president and general manager of a West Coast firm employing over 250 men. The remainder comes from income on his investments. A man in his mid-forties, progressive and a hard-worker, he typifies thousands of other corporation executives scattered over the land.

No Way To Offset Higher Costs

And all those other executives would probably say a hearty "amen" to Mr. X's feeling about his present plight: "In spite of higher costs," he says, "the workingman has made a net gain in real income because of pay raises. But I don't think an executive on a salary has any way of offsetting increased costs. The executive suffered a net loss in real income."

THE TAX COLLECTOR, of course, gnaws away the biggest chunk of Mr. X's income.

"Federal and state taxes on income will run me from $18,000 to $20,000 this year," he says. And that's in spite of California's community property law under which Mrs. X pays only $2,650 taxes on about $11,500, which is half of Mr. X's salary.

Wonders About Free Spenders

The tax bite leaves Mr. X filled with astonishment and wonder at how many other people, meaning the freer spenders in San Francisco's varied social strata, do it. "Sometimes I wonder if all those people you see throwing away their money are dodging their taxes or what. An executive lives in a goldfish bowl and he can't do it. His earnings are watched c and he has to declare everything."

MR. X can't do anything about cutting his taxes, but he can trim and is trimming the next biggest item in his budget—everyday living expenses.

Mr. X has a wife and three young children to provide for. They live in a

14-room house on one acre of ground in an upper-class San Francisco suburb.

Mrs. X is in command of the home front. Mr. X hands her an allowance each month with which she is expected to buy the food, clothe the children, settle the household bills and pay the help.

Household Allowance $1,250 Monthly

Mr. X says the household allowance has been "subject to review" lately, "to make adjustments for the rising cost of living."

The last adjustment raised the monthly sum to $1,250. Before the war, Mr. X recalls nostalgically, it r to about $700 a month.

More than a third of household expenses goes for labor. Help for Mrs X now numbers four—a cook, a governess, a second maid and a gardener. All except the two-days-a-week gardener work full time.

Their wages come to $460 a month, not counting the cost of room and board for them.

"Before the war we paid $75 a month for a cook," says Mr X. "Now it's $150. We paid $90 a month for a nurse (governess) then; now it's $160. Second maid and gardener each draw $75 a month.

"And you've got to remember we have to feed those people three times a day. With food prices where they are that comes to a tidy sum each month."

So the cost of keeping Mr. X's home in running condition adds up to $15,000 a year.

That, plus $20,000 for taxes, leaves $10,000.

A CONSIDERABLE sum in itself, that's not big considering the scale of living as become accustomed to because of, required by, his position.

Belongs to Five Clubs

Take, for example, his social life. Mr. X belongs to five clubs, three in the city because of his business connections, and two country clubs. Dues alone for those add up to $1,300 a year. In addition he has to figure on $160 a month for the four months in mid-year when family social life revolves in a degree around one of the two country clubs. His "golfing club" costs him another $60 a month, mostly for caddy fees which have jumped from $1.50 to $3 for 18 holes.

Then Mr. X takes his family on a month's vacation each summer, usually to Lake Tahoe in the high Sierras. That costs $1,500 even though Mr. X is a family man and doesn't indulge excessively in Tahoe's expensive social life.

These social and entertainment expenses cost Mr. X around $4,000 a year. It leaves him with $6,000. And $4,000 of that goes for the premiums on $100,000 of life insurance which Mr. X carries.

"That $4,000 for insurance is all my savings now," he says, "if you want to call it that. I used to save a nice amount every year, and put it in stocks and bonds. Now I'm just holding my own."

The $2,000 which Mr. X now has on his ledger must pay for everything else. And,

Mr. X belongs to five clubs. Dues alone add up to $1,300 a year.

No New Car or Suits

He has been unable to buy "that new car" and those new suits he wants, and Mrs. X doesn't have the new draperies and rugs she needs "desperately."

So, to make ends meet as prices climb, Mr. X is applying a business axiom to his living standards: "The only way to meet these costs is retrenchment," he says.

Entertainment is the first thing to feel his cost-slashing knife. "A lot of dining-out has gone by the board. I just won't go to these restaurants and pay those awful prices." On the traditional "Thursday night out" for the hired help, the family eats at home.

THERE are fewer clothes for everyone in the X family. "I buy my suits four or five at a time and I'm due for some now. But I've definitely decided to put it off another year. I've paid my tailor $125 a suit for years, right up to the end of O.P.A., but now he wants $200 a suit. I just don't have it to spare."

Mrs. X has had no increase in her clothes allowance. It means fewer dresses for her, and the children have to "make do" with what they have.

Not So Much Gift Giving

The budget for gifts has been slashed. "I think twice before digging into my pockets every time we receive a wedding announcement," Mr. X says.

Instead of the two cars which once used to be in the X's garage, there's one now—a Cadillac. "I found out that I can get along with one car so I'll continue to do so for the present at least."

Last winter Mr. and Mrs. X cancelled their annual late winter sojourn in Palm Springs, southern California's desert resort. And although Mr. X has made several trips east in the last year, he hasn't taken his wife along as was once his custom. "The company pays my expenses, but when I take the better half it has to come out of my pocket. And you know how it is when the women are let loose in those eastern cities. Kind of hard on the pocketbook."

THE X's are going to have an economical Christmas. Mrs. X wants some new furs. Mr. X has told her she'll have to take a rain check. "We decided it would be a lot more sensible to wait until after Christmas when the stores cut prices. It used to be that a Christmas present was something you gave at Christmas time. But today we've got to save a dollar wherever we can."

By dint of saving here and there, Mr. X still lives within his income. He says he intends to continue cutting down expenses rather than biting into savings. "I've never operated that way and I don't intend to start now."

Mr. X is glad he lives in California. He doesn't know how executives in his income brackets manage without the community property law. "A man in California with a salary of $50,000 is better off than a fellow in New York with $100,000. Besides, the climate is nicer out here."

Mr. X buys suits four or five at a time. He used to pay $125 each, now $200.

Labor, Management Agree

U. S. ADVISERS KNOCK FORCED ARBITRATION

A warning that compulsory arbitration or "super machinery" for disposition of labor-employer disputes "may frustrate rather than foster industrial peace" was issued this week by an eight-man advisory committee to the U. S. Conciliation Service.

The committee was composed of four members chosen by CIO and AFL and four chosen by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers. It was set up at last year's Labor-Management conference.

The committee said that it believes free collective bargaining can work and that government's role in negotiations should be limited to voluntary mediation through the U. S. Conciliation Service.

To supplement the work of conciliators, the committee recommended the development of four techniques for special cases:

1. Establishment of a panel of men nationally known for labor relations work to act as special conciliators in major disputes.

2. Tri-partite arbitration, with labor and industry panels to aid conciliators.

3. Voluntary arbitration to resolve some issues in basic contract terms when necessary, and to solve disputes over interpretation or application of terms of agreements. In the latter case it was recommended that clauses providing for arbitration of such grievances be written into contracts. The decisions would be final.

4. Establishment of emergency boards in cases of national importance where normal mediation efforts have failed and where the parties consent. The boards would be appointed from outside the federal government. They would conduct hearings and publish findings.

Hailing the decision of the Committee, Director Edgar I. Warren of the Conciliation Service pointed to more than 13,000 industrial disputes that have been settled by mediation or voluntary arbitration since V-J Day.

Serving on the Committee were: Clinton S. Golden and Richard T. Leonard, CIO; Frank P. Fenton and Boris Shishkin, AFL; and V. P. Ahearn, Louis Ruthenburg, Clarence O. Skinner and H. W. Steinkraus, representing industry.

UOPWA BARS OUTSIDE GROUPS

DECLARING that employer interests are using red-baiting to divide labor, the CIO Office & Professional Workers Executive Board this week issued a policy statement opposing interference with the union by any outside group.

The statement said that the union "will firmly oppose any efforts to interfere in its affairs by any political party, whether it be the Communist Party, the Socialist Party, the Democratic Party, the Republican Party or any other political party or fraternal society or religious organization or other outside organization."

The UOPWA is not Communist-dominated, the statement said, and "communism is no issue in the UOPWA and its membership will not permit it to be made an issue by the defunct and exposed Dies Committee or anyone else."

"The UOPWA is run by its members for its members," the board declared. "The constitution specifically provides that no one shall be barred from membership because of race, color or religious or political beliefs."

In a statement accompanying the declaration, Pres. Lewis Merrill said:

"The policy protects every member in the exercise of his constitutional rights and makes no concession to bigotry. At the same time it is a binding declaration and our membership will not permit anyone to trifle with it."

N. Y. GUILD WINS $100 A WEEK

REPORTERS on the New York Times and New York Herald Tribune won $100 weekly minimums in contracts signed here with the CIO Newspaper Guild of New York. Signing of the contracts made the New York local first to achieve the American Newspaper Guild's wage program of $100 minimums.

Both agreements also provide for a straight 20% general wage increase, which becomes effective three weeks before the old contracts expire Dec. 31, three-week vacations after five years and improvements in general conditions.

In both contracts the $100 minimum for reporters gives them a $10 increase over the previous top minimum of $90. Additional gains were scored by commercial department employes of the Herald Tribune, brought under the contract for the first time. To adjust wage differentials, the commercial workers' salaries were first raised to the level of the former city-wide minimums. The 20% increase applies on those rates rather than their former salaries.

GUILD, STERN RESUME TALKS

NEGOTIATIONS between the CIO Newspaper Guild and J. David Stern, publisher of the Philadelphia Record and the Camden, N. J. Courier and Post, have been resumed following a week during which a dozen persons were injured and four pickets were arrested when police and Record circulation employes battled pickets to clear the way for delivery trucks.

The first meeting was held at the instance of Bishop Bartholomew Eustance of the Roman Catholic diocese of Camden, N. J., as the strike moved into its sixth week.

ARBITRATION ACCEPTED

WITHIN hours after the U. S. Conciliation Service's labor-management advisory committee announced opposition to any form of compulsory arbitration, the CIO Utility Workers and the Consolidated Edison System, N. Y. City, this week stated that they had agreed to settle wage issues through voluntary arbitration.

The union was asking a 35c an hour pay increase and equalization of job rates with those prevailing in civil service, private construction and the N. Y. Telephone Co., increased premium pay for night and Sunday work, a liberalized wage progression plan. Any increases will be made retroactive to Jan. 1, 1947.

The arbitrator will be selected by Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach from three names chosen jointly by the company and the union, N. Y. Supreme Court Justice George Frankenthaler, Dean Ignatius M. Wilkinson of Fordham Law School and Dr. George Taylor, former chairman of the Natl. War Labor Board.

NEW OFFICERS IN WISCONSIN

VICE Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO Auto Workers, speaking at the ninth convention of the Wisconsin CIO Council at Wausau last weekend, urged all affiliates to support the eight-month-old Allis Chalmers strike at West Allis, Wis.

"Some morning I'd like to see every local and individual around that plant," declared Thomas, who has been assigned by the UAW executive board to conduct the strike. "If we can't keep those scabs out we'll go in and take them out.

"I may get into trouble with the law for this, but I've been in jail before and I'm willing to go there again when I consider the rights of the trade union movement endangered."

Robert Buse, president of the striking UAW Local 248, withdrew as candidate to succeed himself as state council president, and Herman Steffes, Milwaukee, head of another UAW local, was elected to the post. Buse said he was withdrawing his candidacy because of his responsibilities as a strike leader.

John M. Sorenson, Milwaukee, was elected secretary-treasurer over Mel J. Heinritz, incumbent. Melvin Lloyd, UAW, La Crosse, was elected to the new office of council vice president, defeating Major Banachowicz, Milwaukee Hosiery Worker.

BROKER'S AIDES CHOOSE CIO

Employes of Herzfeld & Stern this week chose the CIO Office & Professional Workers as their collective bargaining agent by a vote of 39 to 14 in a consent election conducted by the N. Y. Labor Board.

This is the first N. Y. City brokerage house to be organized by the CIO union. Fifty-four employes were eligible to participate in the voting, including runners, telephone operators, secretaries, clerical workers, as well as those in the cage, purchase and securities, margin and order departments.

CALIFORNIA ASKS 30-HR. WEEK

THE California CIO Council at its ninth annual convention at Vera Cruz last weekend adopted a four-point veterans' program which included calling for establishment of a 30-hour week to provide jobs for veterans.

The council also asked a Federal survey to determine the future employment possibilities for veterans, elimination of the $200 a month ceiling for ex-GIs taking on-the-job training, and extension of the veterans' jobless benefits until a veteran is "suitably" employed "at an adequate wage."

Morris Zussman and Mervyn Rathborne were reelected president and secretary-treasurer respectively. The board has expanded so that each of the 30 affiliated unions shall have at least one seat with each of the five largest getting two seats.

Following policy set at the national CIO's Atlantic City convention, delegates voted to "resent and reject efforts of the Communist and other political parties and adherents to interfere in the affairs of the CIO." The state body's constitution was revised to bring it into conformity with policies of the national CIO.

NMU TO STATE DEMANDS JAN. 6

The CIO Natl. Maritime Union will present its wage demands Jan. 6 at a meeting with the American Merchant Marine Institute.

The CIO Maritime Committee reports that a partial investigation shows that ship owners, tanker as well as dry cargo operators, have made net profits in 1946 ranging from 15% to over 1000% more this year than last year.

The continued increase of shipping profits is virtually assured by the 17.6% average rise in shipping rates effective Jan. 1 granted last week by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

DOWN MEXICO WAY

Long History of Democratic Struggles Behind Mexican Labor's Ties With CIO

By LEN DE CAUX

(Second of a Series)

WHAT a Johnny-come-lately on the North American continent is our United States civilization!

Many, many centuries before Christopher Columbus "discovered" America—when the remote ancestors of our Pilgrim Fathers were barbarian "foreigners" leading a crude sort of cave-and-club existence far across the seas—there was an old and well-developed civilization in Mexico.

At Mount Alban, near Oaxaca, an overnight train ride from Mexico City, archeologists have uncovered a two-mile long city of imposing temples, tombs and princely dwelling houses, with even a huge stone court in which an ancient ball game was played.

These ruins date back to several centuries B. C. But the carvings on some of the great foundation stones give evidence of still earlier forms of civilization.

There are drawings of Chinese with pigtails. Negroid types are among those depicted. Some of the carvings show unmistakable Egyptian influence. And incidentally Mexico has its own ancient pyramids in the Egyptian style.

When Cortes and his Spaniards invaded and conquered Mexico, they imposed their way of life on a well-established civilization, which in its turn was the product of layer after layer of immigration or invasion from many different parts of the world.

Since the Spanish conquest and the subsequent achievement of Mexican independence from Spain there have been many other invasions of Mexico, armed or otherwise, from Europe and chiefly from the United States.

AMERICAN big business discovered Mexico long ago. It looked with greedy eyes on this smaller neighboring country, rich in oil and other resources, but weaker far than the U. S. economically, industrially and in military power. Like the Spanish invaders, it saw unrivaled opportunities for loot and exploitation.

United States capital began to flow into Mexico in large quantities, buying up many of its natural resources, exploiting low-wage Mexican labor and seeking a market for American products. Its aim was not to aid the Mexicans in industrializing, in developing their own independent economy and in raising their living standards. Rather it sought to make Mexico an economic, if not a political, colony of the U. S., to skim off the cream of the country's wealth and to prevent any Mexican industrial developments that might compete with the profit interests of Wall Street.

This economic imperialism was aided and abetted by repeated U. S. administrations. While American dollars were used to bribe Mexican politicians, suborn the press, divide the people and even to promote revolutions, American dollar diplomacy interfered constantly in Mexican internal affairs. It flourished the "big stick" of military threats and sometimes brought it down on the head of Mexico in actual armed invasion.

A Typical Group of Mexican Citizens

Trailing along behind American big business came the American Federation of Labor, with its so-called Pan-American Federation of Labor. While the AFL leaders, of course, paid lip service to labor organization and higher living standards in the Latin American countries, their PAFL represented only a small minority of the weak and struggling labor unions in those countries. It depended on alliances with often corrupt labor leaders, and was under constant criticism as a worthless paper organization entirely dominated by the AFL and designed primarily to promote U. S. influence and interference in the labor field.

BUT two great barriers arose to check the gravy-train of Yankee imperialism and exploitation in Mexico.

In the first place, there was the fighting spirit of a proud and independent people, with an ancient culture and way of life of their own—a people made up of peoples who had never yielded to enslavement or exploitation from any source without terrific struggle—a people as proud of their hard-won national independence and as determined to maintain it as are the people of the U. S.

In the second place, there was the development of a great new labor and people's democratic movement both in Mexico and the U. S., which laid the foundations of a natural alliance between progressive organized labor and democratic elements on both sides of the border.

Few countries in the world can match Mexico's long and rich record of revolutionary struggle for national independence, against feudal dictatorship and foreign exploitation, and for democracy and social progress.

But when modern Mexicans speak of the "Mexican Revolution," as they constantly do, they date it back to 1910 and the overthrow of the long Porfirio Diaz dictatorship. Though Diaz himself had been a leader in earlier revolutionary struggles for democracy and against feudalism, once he became president, he betrayed the principles of the revolution and perpetuated himself in office as a reactionary dictator.

The Diaz regime witnessed the hey-day of the feudal rule of the great land-owners, with their thousands of penniless serfs or peons bound to their estates by debt and other devices, of the ruthless force of the militarists, and of the all-corrupting influence of foreign capital and imperialism. All efforts of workers or peasants to organize and assert their democratic rights and liberties, were brutally suppressed.

The principles of the Mexican Revolution, which overthrew this dictatorship, include the restoration of the land to the people who work it, through division of the great haciendas and revival of the ejidos, or communal farms; the right of the workers to organize in unions for collective bargaining; separation of church and state; democratic rights and civil liberties, including free elections and provisions against the perpetuation in office of any administration; promotion of education and social welfare legislation; resistance to foreign imperialism, and the development of Mexico's industrial and agricultural resources for the benefit of the Mexican people, with the aid but without the domination of foreign capital.

Since 1910, the Mexican Revolution has had its ups and downs. Many of its aims are a long way from achievement. There have been betrayals, retreats, graft, foreign influence and many other obstacles. Illiteracy and poverty are still rampant.

At the same time, Mexico's New Deal has a very imposing record of achievement, as set forth in a book just published by Humberto Lombardo Toledano, director of the Workers' University and brother of the well-known Mexican labor leader, entitled, "Construyendo Mexico, 1910-1946."

With statistics, charts and countless illustrations, this book shows the great progress made in education, housing, health, physical culture and social welfare generally; in industrialization and agricultural development through irrigation, etc., and in improving the conditions of workers and farmers.

In any event, there is no question of the devotion of the great majority of the Mexican people to the democratic and social principles of the Revolution—as against the demagogic appeals of the still powerful reactionary and fascist elements. The great and evident popularity of the newly elected Aleman administration, which is supported by the labor and democratic forces and which constantly proclaims its determination to advance the principles and aims of the Revolution, is witness to this fact.

AS already indicated, labor organization is one of the foundations of Mexico's Revolution and its present democratic regime, just as it was a basic part of Roosevelt's New Deal in the U. S.

Mexicans are fond of drawing comparisons between their Revolution and revolutions in other countries such as France, Russia, etc. And one of the favorite comparisons they make is with the Roosevelt New Deal. For Roosevelt was swept into power on an upsurge of the American working and common people, demanding more democracy, better social legislation, labor rights and a friendly policy of cooperation and non-interference with other democratic peoples, in place of dollar diplomacy and efforts at imperialist domination.

The Roosevelt "Good Neighbor" policy toward Mexico and other Latin American countries was hailed as a counter-part to Mexico's own determination to maintain its independence, and to its desire for cooperation without submission. And the proclaimed purposes of such an international policy were bolstered by the growing strength of new progressive labor movements in both countries.

It is one of those illuminating coincidences of history that the CIO and the CTM (Confederation of Mexican Workers) were born at approximately the same time. While the CIO, in revolt against the reactionary and craft-bound policies of the AFL leaders, was launching its great campaigns of industrial organization and mobilizing mass support for the progressive policies of F. D. Roosevelt, a similar development was taking place in Mexico.

Under the New Deal of one of Mexico's most progressive national leaders, President Cardenas, Mexican workers were turning away from the racket-ridden and AFL-minded leadership of the old CROM. Led by Vicente Lombardo Toledano, they formed the CTM, whose forward-looking policies attracted to its ranks existing unions and unorganized workers and soon made it by far the dominant Mexican labor movement.

It was natural therefore that the CIO and CTM should feel a strong bond of common sympathy. And close and friendly relations have existed between the two movements since their inception.

The next article will record first-hand impressions of Mexico's labor unions, and the part they play in Mexican life and in relation to U. S. labor.

The friendly relations between the CIO and Mexican organized labor were still further cemented by the recent visit of a CIO delegation on the occasion of President Aleman's inauguration. CIO News Editor Len De Caux, who accompanied the delegation to Mexico, tells something of the human and historical background to this friendship in this second of a series of three articles on the Mexican labor movements.

THOSE LETTERS TO SANTA

Jane has her heart set on that expensive doll. Jim wants a bike. Joe dreams of a scooter. It makes us wish that money grew on trees. Awareness of what the children want and what they are going to get need not make us blue. It's what they get, not what they don't get, that matters to them. Even though Santa fails to provide everything they order, their eyes will shine on Christmas morning. Be a generous Santa, but even more important be a happy confident one.

Let Youngsters Help

Getting Ready For Christmas

By Ruth Peck McLeod

"RUN along Honey, and get out of Mother's way. Making cookies for Christmas is a lot of work," said a mother to her five-year-old daghter.

"Yes, but I want to help you. It's fun," pleaded the little one.

The child was right. She did want to help and it would have been fun for her to "make" the cookies, as she called cutting the dough into fancy shapes. Even though some of the cookies might have looked a little lopsided, the mother could have re-fashioned them with her deft fingers and the child would have been well pleased with the results.

There is nothing that gives a boy or girl more joy than to help to get ready for Christmas. Even the adult experiences pleasure from such work, though it be ever so laborious. Much of the thrill of the holiday season comes in making preparations and in the joyful anticipation of Christmas Day. It is true that frequently more time is required when allowing little folks to help than when doing the task alone, but it gives the children so much satisfaction to have a real part in the activities, and it also affords the very best opportunity for aiding their development.

IN this servantless age, when the future offers so little promise of domestic help, it will be invaluable to both the mother and daughter for the girl to learn to cook, sweep, dust, and perform other household duties. If there are boys in the family, it may be surprising to find how clever they, too, can be at housekeeping tasks including those along culinary lines. Praising the youngsters for their efforts, even when the results are far from perfect, will prove an excellent incentive for them to wish to keep on helping.

Children who are held partially responsible for the cooking and care of the household will not be too eager to invite company continually, unless their juvenile guests are known to be able and willing to take up the dish towel or broom and do their part in the tasks regularly assigned to themselves.

OUR boys and girls should participate in practically all of the holiday preparations. They should help to trim the Christmas tree—preferably using some homemade decorations—help to select or make many of the gifts, and deliver those intended for persons in their locality. Plenty of preparation must precede such work to acquaint the child with his particular jobs. It is only when the younger members of the family take part in the holiday activities that they derive the maximum enjoyment out of that season. Under such circumstances work becomes play.

Some charitable interest should be a part of every Christmas planning. Children honestly feel that "It is more blessed to give than to receive" when they experience the joy of tactfully aiding those who are in want.

Sprucing Up
FROM OUR READERS

By HANNA SHERMAN

TODAY, we are answering two questions from readers of this column. We've picked these because they are important to a great many girls and women. And with the thought that perhaps they will be helpful in solving your problems.

The first brings up the problem of the value of exercise for the thin girl. The letter says: "You said in a recent column that everyone should exercise. However, I am five feet six inches tall and weigh only 118 pounds. I am afraid that if I exercise I will lose even more weight, much as I would like to be more active.—V. A."

You really have no cause for fear. The proper kind of exercise will definitely not make you thinner. It may help you to gain weight, since exercise helps us to relieve the nervous tension that most thin people are under.

You probably realize that you tend to worry and fret more than you should. This worrying often upsets the digestive system and you don't get the full value from the food you eat. The right physical activity will help calm those jumping nerves, give you that relaxed feeling. You'll find your appetite perking up too.

PLAN your exercise routine and work at it for about fifteen minutes a day. A nice slow tempo is best. Try taking a daily walk in the sunshine. When you do, take it easy, don't hurry. Keep an even pace, breathe deeply and enjoy the scenery. This kind of exercise will help to round out your figure.

Gaining weight is a slow process, but for your height, all you need is ten extra pounds to achieve willowy slenderness. That's worth working for.

Our next question should be of interest to all our readers. A. B. writes, "I found your hints on complexion care quite helpful. You said that diet has a lot to do with a lovely complexion. Can you suggest specific foods that will help clear my skin?"

GAYLORD Hauser, the world famous authority on eating for beauty emphasizes the role of uncooked fruits and vegetables in the diet. He recommends vege-

I would add to them, orange juice, buttermilk, whole wheat bread (instead of white) brown rice, steamed vegetables without butter, plenty of carrots, celery and cabbage. Eat meat only three or four times a week, preferably broiled or roasted. Cut down on coffee, sugar, butter, pastry. Avoid those salad dressings that are made with oil along with gravies.

Eating for beauty has become a slogan with a sound basis in fact. Try these foods for a month. See if they don't result in a noticeable improvement in your complexion.

LABOR HISTORY CALENDAR

A 1947 American Labor History calendar depicting labor's early struggles, outstanding martyrs to labor's cause and unionism's great contribution to democracy is now available to union members, announces Artists for Action in Cleveland.

The calendar, done in two colors, 8½ by 11½ inches in size, was prepared by 12 graphic artists of the organization, formed for the purpose of doing attractive art work for labor and other liberal groups.

The calendar retails for 50c, with a financial return to distributing organizations of 40% (or $20 on orders of 100, etc.) on each sold.

Union orders, addressed to Artists for Action, 1000 Walnut Ave., Cleveland 14, Ohio, must be accompanied by check for initial 30% of total cost, ($15 on orders of 100, etc.) with the 30% balance payable within 30 days after receipt of shipment.

Individual orders must be accompanied by check or postage to cover full amount.

Inspired by unionism's historic past and the belief that in organized labor's strength lies the key to greater security and democracy for all, the calendar illustrates such subjects as the Pullman Strike of 1894, Mollie Maguires, Sacco and Vanzetti, Tom Mooney, Joe Hill, Southern Organizing Drive, Violence against Labor, Political Action and World Labor Unity.

Berge's Warning

TRUSTS THREAT TO DEMOCRACY

THE growth of monopoly business is a threat to industrial and political democracy and if it continues unchecked the American people will lose their freedom.

This was the case laid before a meeting of the Chicago chapter of the New Council for American Business by Asst. Attorney Genl. Wendell Berge last week.

Noting that the 250 largest corporations now hold two-thirds of the nation's useable manufacturing facilities, Berge declared:

"The monopoly problem is today more serious than at any time since the passage of the Sherman (anti-trust) Act.

"If monopoly power follows its traditional course, we can expect higher prices, limitations on production and a lowering of the level of employment.

"Monopoly power prevents the full utilization of our productive and human resources. It retards technological progress. It stifles the development of new enterprise."

"To say that labor unions shall be restrained while the march of monopoly is allowed to continue will result in the abandonment of industrial democracy," he explained. "If industrial democracy is permitted to perish, our proud heritage of political freedom cannot survive."

BREAKDOWN ON THE NAM'S 'BUY-OPINION' BUDGET

OPERATING on what they term the "bank account" theory of propaganda, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers has opened up a $5 million account with the nation's newspapers, radio stations and tuxedoed dinner-table orators.

"The 'bank-account' theory," the NAM propagandists advise, "necessitates making regular and frequent deposits in the Bank of Public Good-Will so that valid checks can be drawn on this account when it becomes desirable to fight for which is right or against which would harm or destroy the Enterprise System."

The first check to be drawn is one against labor, the NAM decided in its recent convention. And, from its checking account in 1946, the $5 million will be spent this way:

About $2 million will be spent for national advertising, as against the $1,871,850 spent to break OPA in 1946. Radio will only take about $150,000 in 1947, but that doesn't include the commentators who mouth the NAM line for the love of it.

Publicity activity, involving a constant barrage of press releases to the nation's newspapers, will take about $250,000, while pamphlets and other printed materials for the nation's schools and teachers, the churches, women's groups and veterans organizations, will probably jump to about $250,000 in 1947.

Close to a million bucks will be utilized to develop community speakers through the speakers training and opinion molders programs, and through actual propaganda jobs in industrial communities.

The use of motion pictures to be shown in schools and public gatherings will be developed with about $50,000, while another $50,000 is set aside for an opinion research plan to see how the NAM propaganda is registering with the American people.

It'll take about $200,000 to raise the $5 million from the country's largest industrialists and bankers. In 1946 it took $187,470 to raise the $3,600,000 used by the NAM to spread its stuff over the entire nation.

Union With a Fascist Label

"WILL CIO Leaders Force 25% More Wages by Threats of Strikes, Shortages and Suffering?"

That was the headline over a full-page ad appearing in the December 17 Pittsburgh Post-Gazetete. The ad was signed by the Tool Owners Union.

What is this "union" that, among other plans, urges "revision of federal labor laws to assure genuine free bargaining"?

The TOU's platform, as published in the ad, calls for abolition of the union shop, for "equality before the law" of labor and business (see Trusts—columns 1 and 2), and for restriction of bargaining to the plant level despite the fact that huge corporations like General Motors have an industry-wide labor policy.

The TOU was incorporated in Delaware in 1945. Its board of founders and advisory committee have interlocking directorates with the most reactionary groups in the U. S.

THE story behind this "union" was brought out last week in N. Y. City, at a hearing held by the N. Y. Labor Dept. on the TOU's application for permission to operate in the state.

The application was opposed by CIO and AFL representatives on the grounds that use of the word "union" was a fraud intended to deceive the public.

Front man for the organization is Allen W. Ruckert, head of a New England industrial consultant firm, who is its president and a member of the board of founders. Others on the five-man board are Rucker's wife, his business partner, Fred H. Nickels, Raoul Desvernines, former president of Crucible Steel Co. and Liberty League member, and Richard S. Rimanoczy.

On the TOU's advisory committee is Dr. Alfred P. Haake, Chicago economist, whom Rucker described at the hearing as a "most valued" member. Haake is a former trustee of DeWitt Emery's anti-labor Natl. Small Businessmen's Assn., served with the Natl. Industrial Information Committee of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and worked for the American Liberty League.

He also promoted anti-union citizens commitetees in Ohio and Pennsylvania during the CIO steel organizing drive and is a paid consultant of General Motors and other NAM firms.

Haake has appeared before meetings of the Citizens USA Committee, an outright fascist organization which has sponsored speeches by Gerald L. K. Smith and Lawrence Denins.

In 1939 Haake and Fred G. Clarke launched the American Economic Foundation, which sponsors a radio forum program, Wake Up America! Dennis and Rucker have both appeared on this program.

Before he became chairman of the American Economic Foundation, Clarke was national commander of the Crusaders, an anti-New Deal organization heavily subsidized by John H. Pew of the Sun Oil Co., Ernest T. Weir, Lammont duPont and Alfred P. Sloan of General Motors.

Like American Action, the Tool Owners Union is aimed at setting up congressional precinct organizations and intends to make its weight felt in the 1948 elections. By feeding on the petty grievances of small investors and appealing mainly to middle class groups, TOU may become the vehicle for a broad fascist movement.

The South On The Air

ELLIS ARNALL, retiring liberal governor of Georgia, called last week for an end to discriminations against the South that hinder progress away from its position as the "nation's number one economic problem."

Appearing on the CIO-sponsored America United program over NBC on Sunday, Dec. 15, Arnall pleaded that "unequal freight rates" and "unequal distribution of federal money, especially for education," have hindered faster-moving development of the southern states.

On the program with Arnall were Allen Swim, public relations director of the CIO southern drive, and A. G. Mezerik, author of the Revolt of the South and West.

Swim predicted that the growth of unionism in the south will lead to a more stable economy, greater purchasing power in southern communities, and greater emphasis on education and other forms of community welfare.

Mezerik noted that much of the riches of the south have been drained off by powerful absentee owners in the north and east. Until the south is permitted to retain the wealth it develops, he said, southern prosperity will be difficult to achieve.

BELL TOLLS FOR HOUSING—CIO

PRESIDENT Truman's lifting of building controls last week added another notch to the let-nature-take-its-course policy that has cut the feet from under a program for the people's welfare.

The President's action served, however, to solidify the unity of the CIO and most veterans' organizations in calling for a genuine housing program.

R. J. Thomas, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, and Housing Chairman Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. of the American Veterans Committee, both called this week for the speedy passage of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Bill and maintenance of rent controls on which the real estate lobby is concentrating its attacks.

Representatives of the AVC, the American Veterans of World War II and of the Veterans of Foreign Wars late last week lashed the real estate lobby for wrecking the veterans housing program. They testified before the Senate Small Business Committee as Truman was working on the statement that Thomas called the "death knell of the veterans' housing program."

Thomas told the committee that the "CIO will intensify its drive for the passage of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft public housing bill as the only sound solution for the utter mess the country is in regarding shelter for the great mass of veterans, for most middle class people and for millions of low-wage persons living now in slums and sub-standard dwellings."

Thomas, whose testimony was presented by John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, called the Truman housing statement "a stop order on all housing for veterans."

He declared that building materials for veterans' homes, already insufficient, "will be even more pitifully inadequate now that the lid is coming off on non-residential housing."

Thomas called for allocation of steel lumber and other building essentials, and more attractive financing for assembly-line houses, which he characterized as the veterans "only hope" for housing.

PAPER GRAB TO BE AIRED

An opportunity for small competitive newspaper publishers to tell their side of the monopoly newsprint squeeze will be provided Jan. 7 at hearings of the Senate small business committee, Chairman James Murray (D. Mont.) announced this week.

Saying that he and Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R. Neb.), prospective GOP chairman of the committee in the new session of Congress, agreed on the importance of the investigation, Murray said:

"The purpose of the hearings is to determine what can be done to preserve the vitality of the smaller newspapers of the nation. We are inviting the assistance of all who want to keep the American press vitally competitive.

"Small dailies and weeklies face more serious threats to their existence today than ever before . . . Their costs are steadily rising but they cannot expand their advertising or circulation because they don't have the newsprint paper for it."

CAREY HAILS RIGHTS GROUP

CREATION of the President's Committee on Civil Rights by President Truman was hailed today by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey as "recognition of the need for intelligent study and militant action on two major domestic problems—the threat to basic civil rights and the menace of racial oppression and conflict."

"At a time when our social fabric is strained from the pressures of post-war adjustments, it is heartening that President Truman has acted to give added strength to our constitutional liberties in this way," Carey said.

"The appointment of Charles E. Wilson of the General Electric Co. as chairman of the committee was a particularly happy choice, since he has a long background of public service and unusual understanding of community problems," Carey declared.

"In naming me to the committee, President Truman has taken note of the pioneering work of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination in seeking new formulas for inter-racial and inter-religious unity and understanding."

Labor-USA

NEW CIO SHOW ON SATURDAY

LABOR-USA, CIO's own 15-minute dramatic radio program, comes back to the airways on the American Broadcasting Co. network on Saturday, January 4, at 6:45 p.m., Eastern Standard Time.

The program will be heard every Saturday evening for the next 26 weeks. It will be good listening.

Produced by Peter Lyon, prominent N. Y. radio figure, Labor-USA will use music, stories and interviews with union men and women to explain the major issues of the day. Much of the radio time will be used to show the need for higher wages to keep Mr. and Mrs. Joe America at a decent standard of living and to keep the entire country on a prosperous keel.

In the course of the series, it is expected that the Labor-USA microphone will travel to various large industrial centers to pick up the voices of union members straight from their homes or places of work. They'll talk about the problems of meeting strained family budgets which face them and millions of others.

Labor-USA is a regular sustaining feature of the ABC. CIO sponsored the program through the first half of 1946, after which the time was made available to the AFL.

RADIO LIBERALS OUSTED; KINGDON IS LATEST

FRANK KINGDON is the latest liberal radio news commentator to be dropped from effective airing of his views. This week labor and liberal organizations charged that Kingdon's former station, WOR—a kingpin in the Mutual network—is providing its audience with "practicaly a one-sided interpretation of the news."

Kingdon was dropped from his daily news commentary spot at 6:00 p.m. when the station refused to grant his sponsor's plea for a better time.

Leaders of CIO-PAC, Natl. Citizens PAC and the Independent Citizens Committee immediately wrote a white-hot protest to the Federal Communications Commission.

They charged that:

● "We have seen in the last few months the dismissal of many commentators associated with the progressive viewpoint by the major networks—an action wholly out of keeping with the spirit of the FCC ruling which provides for a fair presentation of differing shades of opinion."

● If station WOR wanted to present a balanced expression of viewpoints "so that an intelligent public opinion could be formed, Dr. Kingdon would have been retained. No excuse by the station can alter that basic fact."

Kingdon, a former university president, is an officer of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee. A forceful speaker, he has developed a big audience in the New York metropolitan area with his liberal comments on the day's news.

The letters from the three groups urged the FCC to consider WOR's dropping of Kingdon when its license renewal comes up.

AMERICA UNITED PROGRAM ENDS

Discussion of the nation's prospects in 1947 rang down the curtain on CIO's 13-week sponsorship of America United, the Sunday afternoon forum program on NBC.

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, voiced the unions' views on what's needed, in terms of wages and purchasing power, to assure the country of continued prosperity throughout the coming year. Others on the broadcast were Leon Keyserling of the Asst. Sec. of Labor's Advisors, and Fred Bailey of the Natl. Grange.

A week earlier CIO took its America United microphone up to Boston to let Robert Nathan—author of the famed report on wage and profit conditions—and Prof. John T. Dunlop of Harvard University discuss the effect of wage increases on the national economy.

Mr. X, Meet Mr. F

By MIRIAM KOLKIN
Federated Press

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Feinsot of Newark, N. J., have a lot in common with Mr. and Mrs. X of San Francisco, the unhappy couple the Wall Street Journal discovered living in misery on $45,000 a year (story in last week's CIO NEWS).

"That 45 brings us right close together," Joe (Pop) Feinsot said sarcastically. "I make $45 a week and he makes 45—thousand a year." Still in his early 40's despite the nickname affectionately bestowed on him by his brothers in Local 447, CIO Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, Feinsot earns $1.20 an hour as a milling machine operator.

We were sitting in the living room of the Feinsot's home with the Wall Street Journal story spread out on a table in front of us. Pretty blond Mrs. Feinsot stared unbelievingly at the headline. "Mr. X Barely Manages to Make Ends Meet on $45,000 a Year," it said. "Skimps on Clothes, Gifts, No New Car, Fewer Trips."

"I don't know what to say," she said slowly. "We just can't get along at all on what Joe makes. I have to keep putting off bill collectors from week to week. I've been drawing from the bank steadily, but all we have left now is $50."

JOE brought out his weekly pay receipts from the Federal Telephone & Telegraph Co. at Clifton, N. J. His take-home pay the week ending Dec. 15 was $47.43, the week before it was $45.69. On a straight 40-hour week, after deductions for social security, health insurance, withholding tax and union dues ($1.50 a month), his pay came to $43.54.

"And most of the time it's a 40-hour week," Joe said. "The company cut out all overtime last June, and things cost twice as much as they did last year."

The Feinsots pay $40 a month rent for the half of the old-fashioned frame house they occupy on a pleasant Newark side street. Food comes to about $25 a week for them and their son and daughter, 11-year-old twins. "Our milk bill alone last week was $4.56," Mrs. Feinsot said. She pays 24c a quart for an extra good grade of milk to help build up the boy, who was dangerously ill last year and is still weak.

Other items in the Feinsot budget include $7 a month for utilities, $4.68 for a telephone, $5.76 a month for insurance. Then there's $12 a year for a fraternal organization. Their only saving is $2 a week in bonds (in contrast to Mr. X's $4,000 yearly investment in a $100,000 insurance policy).

"We don't go out any more because we can't afford it," said Mrs. Feinsot. "Neither Joe nor I have had any new clothes since I can't remember when. A vacation?" (The Wall Street Journal's Mr. and Mrs. X and their three children spend a month at Lake Tahoe each summer.) "We just stay home."

"There are a lot of things we need," Joe added. "I've got to have my glasses fixed and my wife's eyes are bad too. But we're putting that off. And things around the house need fixing." He pointed to a piece of plaster hanging from the ceiling. "The whole house is like that. The bathroom sink upstairs needs repairing."

A CAR is out of the question, although "we always used to have one when Joe was in business," Mrs. Feinsot said. Joe, who has to take two busses to get to his job in another town, still keeps his driver's license and borrows his brother-in-law's car for an occasional Sunday outing.

Unlike Mr. X, who belongs to five clubs, Joe's life revolves around the union. He is shop steward and Local 447's delegate to the Newark CIO Council. He showed me a letter of praise his union brothers gave him along with a Christmas bonus. The company, although it's a subsidiary of the fabulously wealthy Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Co., isn't giving any Christmas bonuses this year.

"Maybe they're mad because the union is asking for a 25c-an-hour raise," said Joe. "It looks like we're going to have a tough time getting it, but it means everything to people like us."

On The Air With CBS

CIO is one of nine organizations cooperating with the Columbia Broadcasting System to present a new 39-week radio series reporting "the nation's thinking on its main economic problems."

The program, called "Cross Section, U. S. A." will be aired over the CBS network each Saturday from 3:00 to 3:30 P.M. eastern standard time.

Avoiding stuffy speeches, CBS plans to take its mikes into the homes of workers, farmers, business men and professional people in order to get their down-to-earth views on the questions that face all Americans.

Cooperating with CBS for the series are CIO, AFL the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, three principal business organizations and three farm groups. Chief reporter-interviewer for the series will be Bill Downes, who reported the Bikini atom bomb test and who presided during last year's Cross-Section CIO series. Dwight Cooke, who has conducted previous Cross-Section broadcasts, will act as narrator and associate producer of this, as of previous Cross-Section programs.

Edwin Murrow, CBS vice-president, said the new program will seek to present "a coherent cross-section of opinion of various basic groups in the country not merely to record divergences but to define areas of agreement on each problem."

PRICES TOP RECORD SET AFTER WORLD WAR I

THE beating that consumers have taken since price controls were abandoned by the GOP-reactionary Democrat coalition in Congress was highlighted this week by two reports:

1. The Bureau of Labor Statistics announced that prices of all consumer goods—including food—have hit the highest levels on records, 53.9% higher than in August 1939.

2. Milk producers in the N. Y. area, freed from all government price controls, admitted that they had rigged the price of butter in the N. Y. market to "protect" the present high prices of milk. The revelation followed a drop of 10c a pound in the price of butter on the N. Y. wholesale market. Under a purchasing formula, the price of milk is tied to the price of butter. Large dairy interests were quoted as admitting that they had bid up butter prices to prevent a threatened decline of 22c a hundredweight in the price of milk.

Dairy products are among the foods making the most sensational price advances, rising from a BLS price index level of 93.1 August 1939 to 198.5 on November 15, 1946.

The BLS said that at 187.7% of the 1935-39 average, the retail food price index on Nov. 15 was 1.5% higher than in June 1920, the peak average after World War I. The prices were twice as high as those in August 1939, 34% higher than those a year ago, and 29% above the June 1946 level.

The retail prices of all consumers goods in large cities likewise broke the post-World War I record by 1.5%.

COURTS-MARTIAL REPORT HIT

The report of the American Bar Assn.'s special committee to Sec. of War Patterson on the courts-martial system stops short of making adequate recommendations which would really help democratize the Army upon which the CIO has been insisting, Meyer Bernstein of the CIO Veterans Committee declared this week. He pointed out:

"The committee would control the authority of the command over the court, but does not advocate severance of every connection between the commanding officer and the court.

"The committee also recommends that enlisted men serve as members of general and special courts-martial, but no method is proposed to assure that they be free from domination by enlisted officers.

"The need for the end of officer domination is illustrated by the report itself which found that the majority of officers questioned did not think that the courts were dominated, whereas 22 out of 29 enlisted men replied that the courts were dominated."

Threat to Future

CONSUMERS CUT FOOD BUYING

MORE factual ammunition to back up workers' already-powerful arguments for just wage increases came last week from the CIO Wage Research Committee.

"A substantial wage increase is necessary to restore adequate living standards and put the economy on an even keel," the committee report declared.

"Price and profit inflation" have seriously undermined the "living standards of the American people and the stability of the national economy," the committee said in introducing its fact-studded document.

Composed of research directors of a number of important CIO unions, the Committee was headed by Stanley Ruttenberg, assistant CIO director of research. The report is the product of studies undertaken in mid-summer at the direction of Pres. Murray.

Highlights of the CIO report:

1 American workers have been forced to reduce their consumption of meat, eggs, butter and dairy products sharply because of unjustifying price increases.

The destruction of price controls has added $10,000,000,000 to America's food bill alone. Other billions have been added to the cost of clothing and other durable goods by the removal of controls.

2 Last winter's wage increase, widely publicized as 18½c per hour, actually averaged 11½c in manufacturing and 5c in non-manufacturing.

These were not only totally inadequate to reverse the widening gap between wages and cost of living and to provide a more equitable and saner relationship between wages and profits, but they even failed to make up for the loss in hours and other factors which have cut heavily into take-home pay.

3 Workers' real weekly earnings in all manufacturing industries in October 1946, because of rising prices, elmination of premium payments for overtime, downgrading, shifts from war industries to civilian goods industries, and transfers from high to low and paid occupations, would purchase 17.3% less than they could in January 1945.

By the end of 1946, with further rises in the cost of living, the purchasing power of weekly earnings in manufacturing industries will have declined a minimum of 23%.

For every $5 worth of goods a worker's family was able to buy in January 1945, they could now purchase less than $4 worth.

4 In heavy goods industries, such as autos, electrical, steel, rubber, etc., weekly earnings in October would purchase 21.5% less than what they bought in January 1945 because of rising prices and declining weekly take-home pay.

By the end of 1946, purchasing power of weekly earnings in these heavy goods industries will have declined a minimum of 25% since January 1945.

5 In October 1946 weekly manufacturing earnings of $45.83 were still $24 short of the amount needed, according to the Heller Committee for Research in Social Economics of the University of California, to obtain a minimum standard of living of health and decency, whereas in January 1945, the average worker was only $10.75 shy.

6 This combination of runaway prices, soaring profits, and lagging wages has resulted in a dangerous redistribution of national income since the end of the war.

The share of the national income going to wages and salaries declined from an average of 68% in the 1942-45 period to 62.5% in 1946, and lower even than the average during 1936-39.

7 Consumer income must rise by at least $22 billions above the $148 billion level reached in the third quarter of 1946, if the goods now coming onto the market in ever-growing amounts are to find buyers.

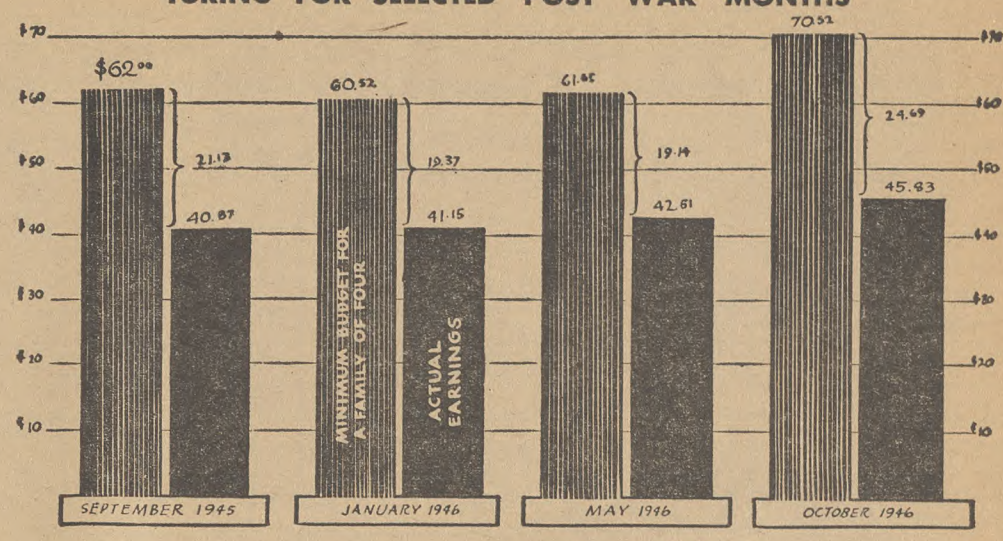
8 In 1947 profits of manufacturing corporations, before taxes, are expected to surpass $15 billions.

Such profits would be 20% greater than the 1942-45 average and almost five times the 1936-39 average. Because of reduced taxes, these corporations could raise wages and salaries by $7.7 billions and still retain wartime levels of profits without raising prices.

9 No allowance is made for productivity increases which, if considered, would make available even more than the $7.7 billion for payment of wage and salary increases in 1947 without affecting profits or raising prices.

Unless American workers are fully compensated for the inflated living costs and the rapid increases in productivity, and unless a more normal relationship is established between wages and profits we are headed for economic collapse. A substantial general wage increase is the most important single step on the road to economic well-being.

WEEKLY EARNINGS NECESSARY FOR MINIMUM STANDARDS OF HEALTH AND DECENCY AND AVERAGE WEEKLY EARNINGS RECEIVED BY PRODUCTION WORKERS IN ALL MANUFACTURING FOR SELECTED POST WAR MONTHS



Courtesy Robt. R. Nathan, Associates Inc.

The chart tells the story of what's happening to the so-called "American standard of living." The sums on the left of each of the four units are what workers should get to maintain a minimum standard of health and decency, according to a widely recognized, authoritative study made by the Heller Committee of the University of California. The figures at the right are what workers are getting.

THE NEED IS URGENT!

NEVER in recent years has the national interest so clearly required a major general increase in real wages. That is the conclusion arrived at by Robert R. Nathan and Oscar Gass in their now-famous report, A National Wage Policy for 1947.

The following excerpts develop their position:

THE purchasing power of by far the greatest number of American families has been falling recently, month by month. Of all the gainfully employed people in the U. S., about three-quarters are wage and salary earners. These—the great bulk of our people—have suffered a major decline in the real value of their earnings during the past two years; in recent months this decline has been proceeding at an alarming rate.

Meanwhile incomes other than wages and salaries have not declined but on the contrary have increased sharply. Since 1944, while the total of wages and salaries derived from all sources—public and private—has fallen, corporate profits after taxes have risen about 50 per cent. Earnings that go, on the whole, to the more prosperous among our people have risen sharply, while the earnings of the workers have fallen.

Three dangers are inherent in the present trends toward a reduction in the real incomes of wage and salary earners and an increase in the share of the total national income going to profits.

- First, the living standards of the masses of our people—never better than a tenuous compromise with minimum requirements of health and decency—are being seriously undermined.

- Second, the long-term stability of our economy is being endangered by a shift of income away from the consumption of the masses and toward savings of the few.

- Third, the social and political health of our democracy is being threatened by the concentration of income and wealth and the resultant concentration of power and influence. These are great dangers.

IT IS obviously futile, at the present time, to anticipate correction of these dangerous trends through reductions in prices and profits. The regulatory mechanisms by means of which reductions in prices and profits might have been achieved, through Government action, have been shattered irretrievably.

Moreover, businessmen show no signs of exercising such self-restraint in their natural search for profits as would bring about a decline in prices except in the face of a sharp reduction in demand. On the contrary, the business community has first pushed aside price controls and then raised prices rapidly in the face of already huge profits. In the five months ending October 1946, living costs consequently rose nearly as much as in the fifty months following Pearl Harbor. Wholesale prices rose even more.

It seems equally futile to anticipate a correction of these dangerous trends through a change in tax policy. On the contrary, current congressional tax-thinking runs, at best, in terms of an equal percentage reduction in total individual tax liabilities for all individuals now paying income taxes. This would mean an enormously greater percentage increase in income after taxes for large incomes than for small ones. Therefore, if current congressional ideas prevail, changes in taxes will still further accentuate the dangerously diverging trends in incomes from wages and salaries as compared to incomes from profits.

THE FACTS all lead to the conclusion that not only from the worker's point of view but also for the benefit of the whole economy a further substantial wage increase without a general price increase is possible, justifiable and essential.

As has been shown . . . the facts combine to indicate the need for wage increases without corresponding price increases. The inflation in which we are enmeshed is clearly not necessary to maintain a healthy level of profits. The wage increases of the past year could have been absorbed without any general rise in the price level. The price line could have been held and still yielded excellent profits.

The Office of Price Administration has demonstrated (Eighteenth Quarterly Report, June 30, 1946, pages 6-11) that the price advances made by leading industries were not necessitated by wage increases. The OPA points out that actual price increases made by fifteen industries before June 30, 1946 were 3.6 times as large as were necessary to offset the wage increases granted. Since June 30 the increase in manufacturers' prices has been even greater and the relationship to wage increases even more remote.

WHICH WAY, 1947?

HIDDEN away in most of the papers, at the turn of the year, are numerous little items that furnish guideposts for anyone who wants to make intelligent predictions for 1947.

Here are a few news headings from two or three papers picked at random:

"Retail Food Prices Highest Ever."

"Corporate Dividends Up 12.6 Per Cent."

"Cost of Living Index Soars To New Peak."

"Profits After Taxes At Record High."

"House Group Says Monopoly Gained in War and Demands New Curbs."

Everything is high as a kite, except wages. Average weekly wages have dropped away down since January 1945 and real wages have been cut by nearly a fourth.

★ ★ ★

MORE prominently displayed in the same papers are other news items indicating what various big-shots think should be done in 1947 about this lopsided situation of inflated prices, inflated profits, deflated wages and increased big-business monopoly.

We read daily frenzied warnings from leaders of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and Chamber of Commerce and every Wall Streeter who can get his name into print, that the country will go to hell if wages are allowed to catch up with the increased living costs.

Senator Taft says that what the country needs is "not higher wages but lower prices" —this from the man who led the fight in Congress to wreck price control and to raise living costs to their present inflationary level —from the bitterest enemy of the CIO's fight to keep prices down!

★ ★ ★

IF ALL this sounds rather negative, it takes little further searching through the papers to find the positive recommendations of most of these gentlemen.

What do they propose to do about the undue share of the national wealth that is being diverted from the consumption of the masses to the savings of the wealthy?

"Tax relief" for business and the well-to-do, is their answer, at the expense of social measures for the benefit of lower-income groups.

What do they propose to do about growing big-business monopoly—as shown by the report of a subcommittee of the House Committee on Small Business that 200 corporations now own more than 50% of all the country's non-financial corporations — monopoly that is choking the little fellow and throttling the competition that might bring down prices?

Go after the unions as a "labor monopoly," is their answer. Emasculate or scrap the Wagner labor relations act. Pass anti-union laws. Do everything possible to weaken the workers' bargaining power for higher wages.

As to prices, do the OPA wreckers, who now claim to favor lower prices, propose any steps to bring them down? Oh, no. On this, though not on bargaining for higher wages, nature should be allowed to take its course. The workers "should wait patiently for prices to fall."

★ ★ ★

IF THE NAM and its political and press stooges have their way, we can predict that 1947 will not be a "happy new year".

It certainly will not be happy for the working people, struggling along on reduced real wages and lowered living standards, with nothing to look forward to but lowered prices when depression forces the hand of business and when layoffs and unemployment will cut their purchasing power still further.

It won't be a happy new year for farmers, professionals and business people, whose incomes depends upon the purchasing power of the masses.

And it will be a pretty sad new year for the whole country when the bubble of super-profits and inflated prices is pricked by the needle of reduced real wages and consuming power— and the "bust" follows.

★ ★ ★

THE CIO, however, is sincerely wishing everyone a really Happy New Year, and putting forward a program to make it happy.

This calls for substantially higher wages, to increase the mass buying power that will keep the wheels of industry turning; for tax relief for the needy and not for the greedy; for strengthened, not weakened, unions to raise the people's living standards and defend democracy; for curbs on big-business monopoly; for expanded social security and intelligent planning for the maintenance of full employment.

If America takes this road in 1947, it can look forward to a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

BY LEN DE CAUX

(This is a nasty-tasting after-Christmas story—a bromo-seltzer for those who had too much sweet stuff.)

THE SNOW was coming down in great gobs. The wind was slapping it into the faces of the passers-by, hurrying to shelter.

The church bells were pealing carols. The streetcar bells were clanging curses. The cash-register bells were ringing up profits.

But Tiny Tim paid no attention. With threadbare coat pulled tight, hands blue and nose red, he stood transfixed, while melting snow seeped through his thin shoes.

Tim's breath was frosting the window of a department store, as his eyes peered hungrily at warmth and light and comfort—warm clothes, fine foods, even a sled or two, and beaming down on all a more-than-life-size Santa Claus.

★ ★ ★

INSIDE, Mr. Gotrocks was beaming too, as he mentally calculated his prospective profits. Then his eyes fell on Tim. And inside Mr. Gotrocks something stirred.

It may have been his Christmas Bourbon. It may have been the hypnotic twinkle in the glassy eyes of Santa Claus. It may have been the church bells.

"Here, sonny," he called, "I've got a proposition." And to himself, "So people think I'm a Scrooge, a hard-headed businessman with no heart. This is the real me."

As the boy stood shaking off the snow, Mr. Gotrocks unfolded his proposition.

"I don't believe in anything for nothing," he said, "it's bad for your character. But would you like to work for some of the things in the window?"

★ ★ ★

"IF YOU shovel the snow from the sidewalk, clean up the furnace room, take out the ashes and spread them around, I'll pay you 25c an hour," said Mr. Gotrocks, "and I'll see you get two hours work. What do you think of that?"

"Not much," answered Tim. "If you'd show me one blessed thing I could buy in your store for four-bits, I might bite."

"But I can remember when I paid kids 20 or 15 cents, and they were glad to get it."

"And I ain't so young but I can remember when your junk was selling for half the price," the boy retorted. "Anyhow I want 40c."

★ ★ ★

A GREAT anger rose within Mr. Gotrocks. "Anyone would think the boy'd been reading the Nathan report and belonged to the CIO," he grumbled. But the Christmas spirit was still warm within him and he decided to show Tim his error.

"Don't you realize prices are high," he said, "because I have to pay more to my clerks and more for my goods, and because other workers asked higher wages, like you're doing?

"If you and the rest ask still higher wages, it's just going to send prices up again."

But Tim was stubborn. "You was doing all right under OPA," he said. "Bet you didn't raise wages like you raised prices. All the dough you've got, you could pay me 40c and the others a lot more too, and never notice it. And if you did charge any more for your junk, nobody'd buy it.

"Anyhow, I can't buy anything here for four-bits. I need clothes, not exercise. And you need more people with more money to buy your stuff."

★ ★ ★

MR. GOTROCKS controlled himself. "Let me give you some good advice, my boy," he said. "You should be more interested in lower prices . . ."

"I am," said Tim.

"Fine. Then the thing to do is not to ask higher wages, but to work hard and wait for prices to come down."

"Like when?" the boy shot back. "I'd starve or freeze to death before you got ready to cut prices. I'd rather wait—and tell the rest of the gang to wait—till the snow piles up and you're ready to be more reasonable than two-bits an hour."

"Get out, you . . . you . . . you labor monopolist! I'll have the law on you," roared Mr. Gotrocks, as the bells stopped pealing, the warmth of the Bourbon wore off, and Santa's glassy twinkle began to look like a leer.

(Any resemblance to persons living or dead, from the neck up, is purely coincidental. It's just a coincidence that Senators Taft and Ball and the NAM and Chamber of Commerce say labor shouldn't ask higher wages but wait patiently for prices to fall, and that they threaten to have the law on labor to keep wages down and super-profits sky-high).

SOUTH OF THE BORDER THE UNIONS ARE THRIVING

By LEN DE CAUX

(Third of a Series)

MEXICO'S labor unions weren't "born to blush unseen." They advertise themselves in neon lights, on billboards and with lengthy streamers stretched around their many buildings. Their members parade through the streets with bands and banners on every possible occasion. They plaster the city with posters announcing their demands and arguments.

While CIO unions aren't always exactly reticent about their internal affairs, the Mexican unions go further. They often tell the world about them through street placards, lengthy newspaper ads and other publicity campaigns.

At its convention in January the CTM (correspondending to our national CIO) is to elect a new General Secretary. This is the top job, equivalent to president of a U. S. organization. Two candidates have announced themselves, Luis Gomez Z. of the railwaymen and C. Fernando Amilpa of the taxi-drivers. When I left Mexico City, some of its busiest down-town streets were beginning to be plastered with the pictures and campaign statements of the rival candidates.

On the day President Aleman was inaugurated, union delegations from all over the country paraded through the streets with their CTM banners. Enormous CTM signs, with pictures and slogans, towered over the street-intersection outside the inauguration building. And the only sign stretched clean across the great square in front of the Presidential Palace, where hundreds of thousands gathered to watch the military parade, was that of the big government employes' union, corresponding to CIO's United Public Workers.

Even in the smaller provincial town where there is little industry, unions are much in evidence. There is the teachers' union, for instance, whose members are spread all over the countryside. And union organization extends into many more miscellaneous lines of work than in the United States.

In a recent Mexico City labor parade, delegations with bands and banners were noted among others, from the following separate local unions: The siesta musicians; the photographers of social events; the sellers of lottery tickets; the "buyers of various objects" (junk-buyers); the organ-grinders; the shoe-blacks; the itinerant workers; the day-time peddlers; the night-time peddlers; and the "cargadores" (porters who carry loads of all kinds on their backs).

QUITE aside from the more demonstrative temperament of our neighbors south of the border, there are plenty of other good reasons why the unions seem so omnipresent in Mexico and take every opportunity to proudly strut their stuff.

Labor organization is part of the basic fabric of the Mexican Revolution. It plays a most influential role in the country's economic, social and political life, and often in industrial and governmental administration.

TOLEDANO AND MURRAY
Top Labor Leaders, South and North

Even Shoe Blacks and Organ Grinders Belong to Unions in Mexico. And When Workers Go on Legal Strikes, No Pickets are Needed—the Boss Has to Shut Up Shop!

In the newly elected Congress of Mexico, there are six CTM leaders who are Senators, including Fidel Velazquez, the retiring head of the CTM; and 26 CTM men have been elected to the Chamber of Deputies.

Mexico's labor laws are in a number of respects more liberal, and grant more rights to unions, than those of the United States.

The right to strike is one of the basic principles of Mexico's democratic Revolution. It has been vigorously reaffirmed by subsequent administrations, including that of President Aleman. No exeeption is made to this right in the case of government employes, who in Mexico include the workers of such big nationalized industries as oil and the railways.

When an authorized strike takes place, no picketing is necessary. Red and black flags are run up over the plants concerned, and they are in effect quarantined until the strike is settled. Employing scabs is illegal; in fact, no one is allowed to enter the struck plant, not even the employer. Furthermore, the employer is required to pay full wages to the strikers for every day they are out.

If this sounds to U. S. unionists a bit too good to be true, it must be added that there is a "catch," in the fact that these provisions apply only to what are called "legal strikes." This means strikes against employers who refuse to abide by decisions of the Federal Board of Conciliation and Arbitration.

This Board is a tri-partite government body, including representatives of unions, management and government, something like the U. S. War Labor Board. When collective bargaining negotiations break down, this Board may render a decision on the issue involved. If the employer rejects this decision, the union may then call a "legal" strike, with the powers of government exerted on its behalf in the ways indicated.

If, on the other hand, the workers reject the decision, they may still exercise their constitutional right to strike. But in that case, the strike is treated as "illegal." The employer may do what he can to break it and need pay no wages to the strikers. And the influence of the government, and usually the top labor leadership, will be used to get the strikers back to work.

ONCE freed from the feudal oppression of the Diaz dictatorship by the Revolution, the Mexican workers availed themselves of their newly won right to organize with enthusiasm, but not always with discrimination.

There are unions of every kind for every kind of occupation —good, bad and indifferent—CTM-affiliated, independent and company unions—bona fide unions, paper organizations and some pure rackets.

Though a number of small rival organizations claim to be national trade union centers, the CTM (Confederation de Trabajadores de Mexico —Mexican Workers Confederation), with some 1,200,000 members, is by far the dominant bona fide labor movement. It is reported to represent about 85% of the country's organized workers.

Headquarters of the CTM are a big modern office building in the center of Mexico City. Nearly all of the major unions are affiliated to it, with the exception of the metal miners and some of the building unions, which maintain close fraternal relations. The major farmers' and landworkers' organization, the Confederacion Nacional de Campesinos, also maintains a close association with the CTM.

The industrial form of organization predominates in the CTM, as in the CIO. Biggest affiliate is the government workers' union, with membership running into the hundreds of thousands. Next biggest are the railwaymen's union and the oil workers.

Other substantial CTM affiliates include the textile workers, telephone workers, motion picture employes, printers, teachers, longshoremen, and the hotel and restaurant, paper, sugar, cement, vegetable oil, and aviation workers' unions.

Many of these national unions have headquarters which are bigger and more impressive than those of comparable unions in the United States. The larger ones have whole buildings to themselves, with up to a half-dozen floors of offices, conference rooms, space for departmental activities similar to those of U. S. unions, and usually a fine auditorium. A number are newly built and their facilities are displayed with great pride.

The dues paid by Mexican union members are usually based on a percentage of earnings rather than a flat rate for all members. They range from 1¼% to 2½% of wages earned, in the unions I visited, with extra assessments for union insurance, pension or other benefit schemes, where these exist. The union or closed shop is in effect for some unions, but not for others.

THE national unions and their larger locals usually have weekly, semi-monthly or monthly newspapers or magazines of their own. Those I saw compare quite closely in content and make-up with similar union publications in the United States.

Mexico also has a national daily labor newspaper, El Popular. Though it is not now the official organ of the CTM, this paper vigorously supports it and the CTAL (Confederation of Workers of Latin America) and features labor news and policy.

Vicente Lombardo Toledano, president of the CTAL, was formerly director and editor of El Popular, when he was head of the CTM. He is now a member of the board of directors, along with his close associates Alejandro Carrillo and the present director, Manuel O. Padres.

Lacking the big advertising revenues and subsidies from industrial and financial interests enjoyed by the top-circulation Mexican dailies, El Popular has hard sledding in newsstand competition with them, particularly in view of the low incomes of the industrial and farm workers whom it champions and among whom it chiefly circulates.

But it is a substantial 10-12 page standard-size publication, with close to 100 employes including its mechanical staff. And it daily challenges the vicious anti-labor, reactionary and near-fascist propaganda of most of the rest of Mexico's daily press.

Next week, the concluding article in this series will give a close-up of Mexican local union activities and labor personalities and problems.

NEW CONGRESS THREATENS TO KNIFE PORTAL CLAIMS

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

APPARENTLY one of the first threatened acts on the part of Congress is not to be directed against the hardships which now confront American workers through the rising cost of living and the absence of decent housing but rather to deprive workers of claims which they have under the Wage-Hour Law as determined by the U. S. Supreme Court.

I refer to claims for back pay to which workers are entitled covering their travel time and time spent on other preliminary work in plants under a recent decision by the U. S. Supreme Court involving the Mt. Clemens Pottery Co.

Under the Wage-Hour Law an employe must be paid time and a half for all hours in excess of the work-week fixed in that law. The Wage-Hour Law establishes the work-week for the year Oct. 1938 to Oct. 1939 as 44 hours. From Oct. 1939 to Oct. 1940, the work-week is established as 42 hours. For all years subsequent to Oct. 1940 the work-week is set at 40 hours.

The Mt. Clemens case involved the time spent by employes in walking from the time clock to the place where work was performed, as well as the time spent in certain "make-ready" activities prior to the commencement of productive work. The question arose whether the time spent in these activities should be considered as "employment" or "hours worked." If the periods of time in question are considered "hours worked," then the employes had a claim against the employer for time and a half for those periods.

This is so because the time spent by the employes in these activities would bring their number of hours to a total in excess of the work-week. Moreover, under the Wage-Hour Law, the employes would be entitled not only to their unpaid wages but also to an equal amount as liquidated damages.

The Court upheld the employes' claim and stated that the time necessarily spent by employes in walking to work on the employer's premises, following the punching of the time clock, was working time. In explaining why it was working time, the Court said that it was "under the complete control of the employer, being dependent solely upon the physical arrangements which the employer made in the factory... Without such walking on the part of the employes the productive aims of the employer could not have been achieved."

Under the reasoning of the Court it would seem that all time necessarily spent in walking on the employer's premises subject to his control should be computed in determining the number of hours worked by an employe. The particular facts of the Mt. Clemens case happened to involve travel time from a time clock to the place of work, and the time clock was at the plant gate. Under the reasoning of the decision, the same result should follow if time is spent on the employer's premises in going to and preparing for work, regardless of whether this time is spent before or after punching the time clock.

This decision, while it dealt with pottery, can be applied to work in a steel mill or a steel fabricating plant, or any other industrial plant. Under the principles of this decision, time spent by an employe in walking from the plant gate to his place of work, in collecting tools, in changing clothes, in receiving instructions prior to the commencement of a shift, should be viewed as working time.

The Mt. Clemens case was prosecuted by the CIO. The basis of the decision is but a natural extension of the doctrine approved by the U. S. Supreme Court for the underground iron miners regarding their travel time. It should be recalled that this also resulted in a case originally prosecuted by the CIO.

American employers were actually on notice after the underground miners' portal-to-portal case was decided by the United States Supreme Court, that this doctrine, under the Wage-Hour Law, applied to all industrial plants. Their failure to pay their employes for all travel time and time spent on other preliminary work should not now be the basis for wiping out all past claims of the workers.

The period of time for which back pay and damages can be claimed depends on the statute of limitations of the State where the plant is located. For example, if the statute of limitations for this type of action in the State where the plant is located is six years, then no claim may be asserted for a period of more than six years before the commencement of the action. If there is no applicable statute of limitations in the State where the plant is located, then recovery may be sought for the entire period beginning with the date the Wage-Hour Law went into effect, Oct. 1938.

Where the individual involved is a veteran, the statute of limitations does not run against him for the period in which he was in the service.

On the basis of widespread propaganda deliberately fomented during the past few weeks by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, open statements have been made that Congress, as one of its first acts, will enact some law to deprive American workers of their claims. Of course, it is well known that any such legislation is unconstitutional, particularly when applied to past claims, but that obstacle is not going to deter the reactionaries in Congress.

This threatened action must be vigorously fought by American labor. However, it should be anticipated that not much time will elapse before Congress attempts to enact such legislation.

The end of 1946 will soon arrive. Our movement has come through some trying experiences. It has distinguished itself with honor and glory. All of our officers and members can rightfully feel proud of the achievements they have made. Let us face the new year with faith and confidence in our movement and determination to carry forth the message of organization to the millions remaining unorganized, with everyone in our organization cooperating to the fullest extent to obtain its objectives, which are not only to the benefit of all our members, but all the people in our beloved country. Strengthening of the democratic way of life is best assured through organization of the workers everywhere. A happy New Year to all!

3d BIG PACKER, UNION AGREE

WAGE increases from 7½ to 23c an hour which include a drastic narrowing of wage differences between packinghouse workers in the northern and southern states are contained in the contract signed with Armour and Co., Pres. Ralph Helstein of the CIO Packinghouse Workers announced this week.

The new contract provides for geographic adjustments ranging from 2½c an hour for six plants in the mid-west to 15½c an hour for the plant at Fort Worth, Tex. Thirteen plants in the Armour chain are to receive the geographic adjustments.

In addition to the geographic increases, all Armour workers at 23 plants represented by the UPWA-CIO are to receive a 7½c an hour wage increase. Some 36,000 workers are covered by the new agreement. The wage increases are retroactive to Nov. 1.

Armour is the third of the Big Four to sign an agreement with the CIO union.

CIO SIGNS ATOMIC PLANT PACT

THE CIO this week won a 10c an hour increase and the check-off of dues and initiation fees in the first contract entered into between a union and one of the three main atomic energy operating plants at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

The contract covers the 5,000 employes at the second largest Oak Ridge plant, the one operated by the Carbide & Chemical Corp. of America.

The CIO Chemical Workers, which last Sept. won a run-off election at the plant, negotiated the contract, which contains many excellent provisions. In addition to the general hourly increase, shift premiums of four and six cents were boosted to five and ten cents.

The agreement provides time-and-a-half for all work in excess of eight hours a day and of 40 hours a week, double time for the seventh consecutive day, and no discrimination in pay rates between men and women.

Laid-off employes shall receive four weeks' termination pay. A leave of absence of one year shall be granted at the union's request, with the employe retaining seniority.

The rate of vacations is one week after one year, two weeks after two years, three weeks after 15 years, and four weeks after 20 years. In lay-offs, a senior employe may replace an employe having less seniority.

While the contract provides for union representation in grievance machinery, the U. S. Conciliation Service will appoint an arbitrator to settle unresolved disputes.

CASE ORDERED TO BARGAIN

The strike of the CIO Auto Workers at the Racine, Wis., plant of the J. I. Case Co., is the country's longest. The strike began Dec. 26, 1945.

The company, which has rebuffed repeated efforts by the U. S. Government to have it come to terms with the strikers, late last week was ordered to bargain on the union shop and check-off.

The NLRB found unanimously that the firm had committed an unfair labor practice by refusing to bargain on the union shop demand since Oct. 8, 1945, "thereby causing this strike." If the company fails to obey the order, the board will seek enforcement in the Federal Circuit Court in Wisconsin.

LONGSHORE ASKS 14c

A DELEGATED caucus representing 20,000 longshoremen and clerks of the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union met in San Francisco this week and unanimously approved the longshoremen's demands for a 14c per hour wage increase presented before arbitrator Clark Kerr on the basis of cost of living increases.

The caucus also unanimously affirmed that their recent maritime strike "was necessary in order to secure gains made, that it was successfully conducted, and that it completely defeated shipowners' attempts to take away conditions existing for many years."

The 60 delegates unanimously accepted the report on the strike and settlement presented by ILWU President Harry Bridges for the negotiating committee.

"The ILWU has emerged from its recent struggles in better shape than any other union in the country to meet the battles ahead," Bridges told the delegates. Indicating that the employers plan an intensified drive against the unions, Bridges said, "The ILWU is in good shape to fight. We're not going to take any beatings."

CHALMERS REJECTS FACT FINDING

The Allis-Chalmers Co. this week rejected the proposal of Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO Auto Workers that the company join with the union in asking President Truman to appoint a fact-finding panel to settle the eight-month-old strike at the company's West Allis, Wis., plant.

Thomas declared that the union is willing to have the workers vote on the union's and the company's proposals, provided Allis-Chalmers is willing to be bound by such a vote.

"We have proved conclusively," Thomas said, "that the Allis-Chalmers wages are sub-standard and that both Allis-Chalmers workers and their competitors suffer from this discriminatory status. The company has not even attempted to refute our case."

REID ROBINSON REELECTED

Reid Robinson was reelected president of the CIO Mine Mill & Smelter Workers by a vote of 37,736 over James J. Leary who polled 31,508, final tabulation of the Nov. 4 referendum vote disclosed.

Elected with Robinson in the largest election in the union's history was Maurice E. Travis of Martinez, Calif., who defeated incumbent Vice-Pres. Ralph Rasmussen of Salt Lake City, Utah. Charles W. Moyer of Pottstown, Pa., was elected secretary-treasurer, the post currently held by Leary.

NEWS GUILD REJECTS PAID PRESIDENCY

The CIO Newspaper Guild by a referendum vote of 3,834 to 3,661 rejected a proposal to create a full-time paid presidency. The union at present has a non-salaried part-time presidency, and a executive vice-presidency and a paid secretary - treasurer.

Tax Windfall For The Rich

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Council

THE Republican proposal for a general 20% cut in income taxes would bring enormous windfalls to wealthy taxpayers, but workers and other low income groups would receive no real benefits. The inequitable character of the Republican proposal comes out clearly when we examine what it would mean to the average worker and to a top management exacutive.

The average weekly wage in the manufacturing industries during October 1946 was $45.83. At this rate, the annual wage of the average worker was $2,383.16. At current 1946 income tax rates, the average married worker with two children has to pay a tax of $28 on his yearly income, or 54c a week.

Under the Republican proposal of an across-the-board cut of 20%, the average worker would thus get a tax saving of $5.60 a year or 10.8c a week. His take-home pay would be increased by only 0.2%. The average worker after the 20% deduction would have to pay an income tax of $22.40 a year. Before the war in 1939, since he had an exemption for his family of $3,300, he would not have had to pay any income tax at his present wage level.

Contrast this meaningless reduction to the average worker with what would happen to the $100,000 income of a corporation executive. Under the present 1946 rates, if he is a married man with two children, he pays an income tax of $62,301. If the 20% cut went into effect, he would have tax savings of $12,460 or $239 a week. His take-home income after taxes would thus be increased 33% by the 20% cut. His 1947 taxes, assuming the tax cut is put into effect, would be $49,841. In 1939 he paid, $31,997 on a $100,000 income.

LET US now see what the 20% across-the-board cut would mean to Tom Girdler, chairman of the board of Republic Steel. His 1946 compensation as reported to the Securities and Exchange Commission was $275,000. It may be considerably higher this year, but let us make our calculations on the basis of $275,000 a year. His income tax at 1946 rates (assuming he has two children) is $212,087. His savings after the 20% cut would be $42,417 or $816 a week.

His take-home income after taxes would thus be increased by 67.4%. After the 20% cut, the tax on his $275,000 income would be $169,670. In 1939 the tax would have been $144,700.

It can be seen that the 20% across-the-board cut becomes increasingly more inequitable as it is applied to the top income brackets. In the very top group, the 20% cut would reduce the 1947 tax to a level lower than it was in 1939 before the war.

At 1946 rates, the tax of a married man with two children having an income of $1,000,000 is $838,850. A 20% tax reduction would bring him tax savings of $167,770 or $3,226 a week.

His take-home income after taxes would be increased by 104.1%. His tax after the 20% cut would be $671,080. In 1939 his tax would have been $678,436 or $7,356 more than in 1947 if the 20% cut takes effect.

A married man with two children having an income of $5,000,000 pays a tax of $4,296,850 at 1946 rates. Under the 20% reduction he would have tax savings of $859,370 or $16,526 a week. His take-home income after taxes would be increased by 122.2%. After the 20% cut his taxes would be $3,437,480. At 1939 rates he paid $3,788,370. He would thus have to pay $350,890 less in 1947 than in the prewar year of 1939.

EDUCATION FOR PEACE

A United Nations meeting at Paris to buttress the forces of world peace through international understanding and education was a big step in the right direction.

Kermit Eby, CIO director of research and education, returned from the conclave of the United Nations Education (UNESCO) with a suggestion that labor unions and other civic groups should see to it that the new organization "doesn't become a monopoly of scholars."

"UNESCO is the educational foundation on which the world hopes to build a political structure for peace," Eby declared.

As a member of the U. S. delegation, the CIO official participated in all sessions of the 32-nation meeting at the French capital. Head of the delegation was Asst. Sec. of State William Benton. The American group included several leading educators and experts on cultural affairs.

"UNESCO is of particular interest to organized labor," Eby declared, in reviewing the work of the international meeting. "If UNESCO is to succeed, we must develop an adult education program of vast proportions.

"The peoples of the world must have access to the information necessary to arrive at proper judgments, and to carry those judgments into action. Labor must see to it that UNESCO does not become the monopoly of scholars. UNESCO must disseminate knowledge, not merely catalogue it."

THE job of the important United Nations subsidiary organization is two-fold: to serve the interests of world peace and world understanding; and to foster and promote all aspects of education, science and culture.

Prime Minister Clement Attlee outlined UNESCO's function, Eby said, when he pointed out that "since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that defenses of peace must be constructed."

In line with that general directive, recommendations approved at the meeting included proposals for rebuilding and strengthening of educational institutions throughout the world; wider exchange of teachers and students on an international basis; examination of text books used in the schools; and a general program providing easier access to libraries, easing of copyright laws and direction of international radio programs.

Eby commented that "unfortunately the Soviet Union was not present at Paris. Without her, UNESCO is incomplete. If we would build one world, all nations must participate."

The statement of the organization's preparatory commission pointed out that UNESCO is not only a relief and rehabilitation organization, but must be dedicated to the "preservation of the peace through understanding."

Present inequalities in educational standards among nations are a threat to that peace, the commission added, since the world "cannot become one if half of it remains illiterate."

And Julian Huxley, the eminent British scientist, writing of the new organization's future, said that it must stay clear of religious or economic philosophies which might promote the hostility or non-cooperation of any member nation.

UNESCO's purpose, he wrote, must be to "bring in all the peoples of the world, and of treating all peoples and all individuals within each people as equal in terms of human dignity, mutual respect and educational opportunity."

Eby feels strongly that qualified people from CIO should participate in UNESCO's future work, and that the results of its work be made available to American unions during the coming years. In that way, the important UN organization will really reach the people, for whom it is intended.

BUILD INTERNATIONAL TIES: Mrs. Quincy Wright, chairman of the Chicago League of Nations Assn., and Kermit Eby, CIO education and research director, talk over plans for UN educational organization during the recent 32-nation conclave in Paris. The CIO official sees a big future for UN educational activities in helping common people of the world gain education and understanding.

WORLD LABOR

JAPANESE LABOR unions, given their first freedom in more than a decade, have organized 80% of all industrial workers, according to a statement of the government's Ministry of Welfare.

There are now 15,172 unions in the country, with an estimated 4,100,000 members. One member in four is a woman.

A PROGRAM calling for industrialization of the nations of Central and South America, in order to lift living standards and promote prosperity, was passed at the convention of the Latin American Federation of Labor (CTAL).

The CTAL, representing most of the labor movements south of the Rio Grande, held its meeting at San Jose, Costa Rica. Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Union acted as a fraternal delegate for CIO.

At the same time, the convention expressed vigorous opposition to a U. S. plan for training, equipping and supervising Latin American armies. It also criticized a State Dept. plan for providing loans to the Latin American republics, on the basis that the conditions for getting the funds would hold down industrial development in the small countries and make them the servants of American capital enterprises.

The CTAL adopted a policy resolution expressing its intention to remain "independent of any political party, of any church or religious sect."

It also launched a defensive crusade against AFL splitting tactics south of the border. The AFL has sent agents and representatives into Central and South America in an effort to form a new rival organization of labor unions.

A committee has been selected to tour Latin American countries and explain the nature of the AFL's war on the CTAL.

THE FIRST post-war convention of Italy's big, 6-million-member General Confederation of Labor, will open on March 15.

Italian unions, driven underground by Mussolini's fascism, came back into existence at a congress in Naples two years ago, while the northern half of the country was still under Axis domination.

Shortly after the liberation, the northern unions held a regional conference, and the Confederation's executive committee was set up with an equal three-way division of seats among Communists, Socialists and Christian Democrats.

The Italian unions are at peak strength. About two million workers belonged to the labor organizations in 1922 when Il Duce conducted his pullman-car march on Rome and ended the democratic regime.

EARLY in the new year leaders of German labor from all four occupation zones will meet in Berlin to give the country its first national union organization in 14 years.

With a membership of about six million, the four zonal union federations have about three-quarters of the membership they claimed in 1933 when Hitler came to power.

Conferences of spokesmen from the Russian, French, British and American zones have already been held in Berlin, and they will be held at regular intervals pending a national convention.

TALMADGE DEATH MAY SEAT ARNALL

GOVERNOR-ELECT EUGENE TALMADGE, the man who won election on a rabble-rousing white supremacy platform although a majority of the voters backed his opponent, died at Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 21 of cyrrhosis of the liver and stomach hemorrhages.

His death leaves a legal tangle over who will be Georgia's next governor. Since the state's laws of succession are vague, there is the possibility that present Gov. Ellis Arnall may continue in office until the next gubernatorial election in 1950 or that Georgia's first lieutenant-governor, M. E. Thompson, who would have been Talmadge's successor if the new regime had been sworn in, might take over.

During his campaign Talmadge denounced a U. S. Supreme Court decision allowing Negroes to vote in a Democratic white primary and swore that if he was elected no Negro would ever vote again in a Georgia white primary.

HIT TARIFF CUT ON TOYS

A further reduction in tariff rates on toys and dolls would place in jeopardy the labor conditions and business standards of our domestic industry, according to a brief submitted to the Committee For Reciprocity Information in Washington over the signature of Anthony H. Esposito, president of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers Union.

"Even before the war," the brief stated, "our industry was troubled by large quantities of toys produced abroad under conditions that sometimes amounted to slavery."

Pointing out that much of the production of playthings abroad occurs under unhealthy homework conditions, the brief stated that "this sort of production has placed and can continue to place in jeopardy the progress made by our domestic industry on every front. By unequal competition it may undermine the labor conditions, trade practices, and more healthful products for the consumer that have resulted from all our efforts in the last decade."

WAGE-HOUR TO MOVE

The national office of the Wage & Hour and Public Contracts Divisions, located in N. Y. City since 1942, will be returned to Washington about February 15, according to Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach.

FIRST WOMAN CABINET MEMBER'S STORY OF A GREAT PRESIDENT

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FRANCES PERKINS' book, "The Roosevelt I Knew," deserves more attention from labor than it may receive. For the labor movement, like other groups in America, still has a long way to go before it reaches the ideal of complete fairness to women.

The book is worth careful reading by everyone—male or female—interested in labor and government, for several outstanding reasons. It throws light upon the character and mind of a great pro-labor president. It gives the personal experiences and pioneer hardships endured by the first woman ever to hold a cabinet position in the U. S. And perhaps most important of all, it contains valuable fundamental lessons in grass-roots political work that could be of great help to labor's political activities.

It is no secret that Miss Perkins innocently aroused the antagonism and prejudice of some of the labor men prominent in New Deal government affairs who held her New England accent, her social worker's background, and her sex against her.

A woman who gets in a top position today in a field commonly regarded as suitable for men only, usually has to be pretty hard-boiled. But the unique opportunity given Miss Perkins to become the first woman cabinet member came about not because she was a rustler ambitious for high office, but because she had the good luck to work early in her career with a man big enough to recognize her ability regardless of her sex and to give her the the same chance he would have given a man. Some of the most interesting parts of her book deal with her activities as State Industrial Commissioner under Roosevelt when he was Governor of New York.

Frances Perkins was no battle-ax. She was dignified, courageous in the face of bitter opposition and harsh criticism; modest, shy—and to protect herself—a bit pompous. During her years in office as secretary of labor, gossip stories were going the rounds in Washington about how she antagonized important men who were conferring with her by lecturing them, or treating them as though they were small boys. Perhaps she did. Some of the inside stories she tells may offer some justification for such an attitude on her part.

AS Secretary of Labor Miss Perkins witnessed many tense moments in the hectic atmosphere of Washington. Under stress of emotion, men—even wise men—do not always behave sensibly. Soothing ruffled feelings was one of the jobs Pres. Roosevelt sometimes assigned to his Secretary of Labor.

For instance there was the time Miss Perkins drove for hours through Washington parks trying to calm and reason with Gen. Hugh Johnson, a colorful, explosive, likeable but very erratic man who often wanted to bite off more than he could chew. The General had just learned that Pres. Roosevelt, instead of appointing him sole administrator of the Natl. Recovery program, as the General expected, had decided to divide administration of the NRA into two parts, one covering industrial codes and labor under Johnson, the other, the public works program, under Harold Ickes.

Johnson was so irate he wanted to chuck the whole thing. "Don't blow up. Don't pull out," Miss Perkins pleaded, while the General continued to groan, "It's terrible, it's terrible!" Miss Perkins, indeed treating him as if he were a small boy, finally persuaded the General "to be a good soldier and go along with the President's wishes."

THIS incident and others in the book are of particular significance to labor because they show the constant need for vigilance by labor in government affairs. Too often the outcome of programs vitally affecting the interests of workers are determined by the actions of ambitious and unreliable officials groping in the darkness of their own ignorance, and scorning, or never thinking of seeking, advice from experienced labor people.

Frances Perkins lifts the curtain on quite a few acts kept from public view when they happened, although she does not do it to give the low-down or to expose something she regards as wrong. Her long years as a government official marked her too deeply for that.

It is true that her outlook throughout remains essentially that of the earnest, honest social worker who believes that the main hope for the working class lies in improved social legislation, and while she certainly believes strongly in trade unions, she does not have the real feel of their importance.

In spite of this limitation in her labor outlook, Miss Perkins has no occasion to feel ashamed of her record. Working under the handicap of feeling she was not wanted, she tried sincerely to do her best. Few if any of her male predecessors worked as hard and did as much for the Labor Dept. as she did. If she had been a man she probably would have been hailed as the best Secretary of Labor ever to hold the job.

CIO PRAISED FOR FIGHT AGAINST BIAS

THE CIO's anti discrimination policies get some words of warm praise in a report just issued by the Julius Rosenwald Fund reviewing the two-year period 1944-46.

Pointing out that the CIO has from the beginning "insisted on a united front of all workers unbroken by discrimination or segregation," the review calls it "the most effective agency of this generation in establishing the practice of equal opportunity."

The record of the AFL has not been so good, says the report, although there have been some recent improvements. Its past attitudes were influenced by the exclusiveness of craft membership. And the very nature of its federated organization "makes it difficult to set uniform policies and practices," the report states.

One CIO official is among the more than 54 persons receiving a Negro fellowship in 1945-46. He is Richard Sylvester Hamme, of Boston, Mass., chairman of the CIO Transport Service Employes regional council in New England, who was awarded a fellowship to study labor economics at the Trade Union Fellowship Project, Harvard University.

Among the others who received grants for projects of especial interest is Alice Elizabeth Catlett, instructor of art, George Washington Carver School, New York, to do a series of lithographs, paintings, and sculptures on the role of Negro women in America.

Among the 31 Southern White Fellowships granted was one to Marion Palfi, free-lance photographer, N. Y. City, for a series of photographic studies employing interracial and intercultural themes.

Donald Lee West, superintendent of schools, Lulu, Ga., received a fellowship to do work in the field of rural education at Ohio State University and the University of Georgia.

NLRA HANDBOOK AID TO UNIONS

A handbook on the Natl. Labor Relations Act by Louis G. Silverberg, information director of the NLRB, designed primarily for universities, unions, and other groups engaged in labor education, has just been issued by the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The pamphlet contains a history and summary of the law and its administration as well as its text.

Copies in limited quantities are available, so long as the free supply lasts, from the Director, Division of Labor Standards. Larger quantities may be purchased for 15c a copy from the Supt. of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

A 25% discount is allowed on orders of 100 or more.

LABOR SHARE IN MANAGEMENT AIDS BUSINESS, SAYS CIO

THE record shows that labor has proved it can share in management and that it has special knowledge to contribute toward the making of wise decisions, says a pamphlet published this week by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

The pamphlet, entitled "Should Labor Have a Direct Share in Management?" is available free from the Department, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington, D. C.

In 31 pages, the pamphlet develops facts to show that:

"In numerous situations, before the war, unions called in to assist management turned a business which was losing money into one that could hold its own in the competitive market.

"During the war, labor, by its suggestions and aid in production and manpower problems, helped to increase production in 5,000 factories, mines and shipyards. In peacetime it can also help to make 'a bigger pie to divide.'"

A foreword by CIO Pres. Philip Murray points out that "labor does not question management's right to run business." However, Murray says, "there is a growing need for a closer linking of authority and technical knowledge."

"The efficiency of business," Murray continued, "its return to all concerned, including the consumer, can be greatly enhanced by drawing upon the total skill and experience of the workers right on the job.

"Both the need and the possibility should give rise to a new type of manager, one who encourages a frank and honest exchange of ideas on mutual problems between labor and management."

OVERWEIGHT PROBLEM

By HANNA SHERMAN

THEY'RE singing a song of Psycho-significance today. And some of our most cherished beliefs are being shattered. Fat men and women are not happy and jolly, we find.

They're fat because they overeat and they overeat because they have emotional difficulties. During the depression years when people worried more, the average weight was higher than it is today.

To confirm the fact that there is a connection between emotional health and weight, I consulted Dr. Samuel Hochman, one of New York's most eminent endocrinologists. He said that nine-tenths of his overweight patients are unhappy people.

He told me that he encourages his patients to talk about their difficulties and helps them to understand why they need to overeat before prescribing a reducing diet. Your own doctor can tell you if you're part of that rare 10%, but chances are that eating too much is the only reason you're fatter than you should be.

HERE is the type of diet that is most used by modern weight specialists. They put patients who must lose weight on a high protein diet after, of course, a thorough physical check-up, plus a metabolism test. This high protein diet emphasizes such foods as eggs, fish, meat, lean beef, veal and lamb, turkey, chicken.

Liver may be eaten broiled, but only once a week. On most diets of this type, you are allowed citrus fruits, a long list of vegetables, two glasses of milk (skimmed milk or buttermilk), one teaspoon of butter, raw fruit, fruit cooked with very little sugar, and fruit gelatin desserts.

A TYPICAL day's menu might be this one. For breakfast: a citrus fruit (grapefruit, a whole orange, tomato juice), coffee, with milk but no sugar, one glass of milk, two slices of toasted dark bread with one teaspoon of butter, two eggs.

For lunch: tomato or clam juice, clam broth or clear soup; two eggs (unless you had them at breakfast) or a serving of shellfish or a small serving of lean fish or meat; two vegetables or one vegetable and a salad (with a non-fattening dressing, of course), a glass of buttermilk or skimmed milk; a serving of raw fruit, black coffee or tea if desired.

For dinner: bouillon, clam broth, or clear soup; a serving of lean meat, shellfish, or fish; two vegetables or salad and one vegetable if you had no salad at lunch; raw fruit or fruit jelly; coffee or tea if desired.

OF course, you can shift the items in this diet around. For instance, a milk soup at dinner can substitute for that milk soup at lunch. This diet, if followed faithfully, will help you to lose that extra poundage.

Next week, we will list some of the foods that are forbidden to reducers and some of the items you may include to add zest and variety to your meals. But for this week, do hold to this simple menu. If you don't cheat, you'll be a slimmer gal. Try it and see.

Savings Drop

Individual savings in the U. S. slumped $1 billion from the second to the third quarter of 1946, according to a survey issued by the Securities & Exchange Commission in Philadelphia. This contrasted with a normal seasonal rise for the period, the SEC pointed out.

The commission's analysis revealed that total savings amounted to $4,300,000,000 in the third quarter as compared to $5,300,000,000 in the preceding period. This reflected "the increase in consumer expenditures which more than offset the increase in income after payment of taxes," the bulletin said.

Ae the same time people increased their mortgage debts by $900 million, other consumer indebtedness by $500 million and reduced their holdings in non-government securities by $500 million.

Some $200 million worth of Series E government savings bonds —the series held by the average small-income person—were cashed in.

POOL OF EXPERTS

Unions with hard-to-fill positions may look to the pool of experts who will become available upon termination of the Natl. Wage Stabilization Board in Washington, D. C., and its 11 Regional Boards.

Available immediately, or very early in the forthcoming year, are economists familiar with industrial wage structures, statisticians, and attorneys with labor-economic backgrounds.

Unions may obtain names, and complete information as to training and experience, by writing to the Natl. Wage Stabilization Board, Washington, D. C., or to any of the 11 Regional offices.

Tomorrow's Citizens ● By Rose H. Alschuler

Happy New Year

A really Happy New Year for a family means a year in which everyone is well. We can do a great deal to keep ourselves and our children in good health. Let's each ask ourselves, . . . has every adult in the family seen the doctor within the last twelve months? Have the children all had physical examinations and been properly immunized against the preventable diseases? Does the family carry hospitalization insurance? These measures plus certain home safety precautions should help to ensure a healthy Happy New Year.

the ADVENTURES of JIM BARRY

The story, characters, incidents and scenes mentioned here are entirely imaginary and fictitious, and have no identification with actual persons, living or dead.

WONDERING WHY RUBY CARRUTHERS — DAUGHTER OF THE OWNER OF THE WARRENTOWN MILLS — SHOWS SO MUCH INTEREST IN HIM, JIM ARRIVES AT HER HOUSE FOR DINNER...

SEE, JIM? RICH PEOPLE AREN'T AS TERRIBLE AS SOME OF THE LABOR AGITATORS MAKE THEM OUT!

I WOULDN'T KNOW, MISS CARRUTHERS, NOT HAVING LIVED WITH RICH FOLKS.

THIS IS DAD, JIM. HE DOESN'T LOOK SO BAD NOW, DOES HE?

HELLO SON, WE'VE MET BEFORE, WHEN JIM CAME TO TOWN THE FIRST DAY.

RUBY IS CERTAINLY GOING AFTER JIM BARRY IN A BIG WAY... I JUST HOPE THAT IT ISN'T GETTING HER... I'LL HAVE TO SPEAK TO HER.

MIND IF I LEAVE YOU FOR A MINUTE? DAD'S MOTIONING TO ME LIKE A MADMAN... I THINK HE WANTS TO KNOW IF MY INTENTIONS TOWARD YOU ARE HONORABLE...

WHAT IS IT, DAD?

COME IN HERE. I WANT TO HAVE A TALK WITH YOU!

IT'S ALL RIGHT TO HAVE A MILD FLIRTATION IN ORDER TO GET INFORMATION FROM HIM... BUT, DID YOU HAVE TO INVITE HIM TO DINNER?

IT ISN'T ENOUGH, DAD... I HAD TO BRING HIM HERE BECAUSE I WANTED YOU TO GET TO KNOW HIM. REALLY KNOW HIM!

WHAT DO YOU MEAN, RUBY?

I WANT YOU TO BE NICE TO HIM... GIVE HIM A GOOD JOB AT THE PLANT... GET HIM AWAY FROM THOSE VULGAR WORKERS HE'S LIVING WITH NOW...

WHY? I DON'T LIKE THIS SUDDEN INTEREST IN HIM!

HE'S NOT WHAT YOU AND I THOUGHT HE WAS, DAD. THERE'S NOTHING PHONEY ABOUT HIM... HE SAYS WHAT HE MEANS — NOT LIKE THE OTHER MEN I KNOW!

YOU SENSED THAT THERE WAS SOMETHING DIFFERENT ABOUT JIM BARRY... THAT'S WHY YOU WANTED ME TO GET ACQUAINTED WITH HIM AND FIND OUT WHAT HE'S LIKE. WELL, YOU WERE RIGHT. THERE IS SOMETHING ABOUT HIM...

MY GOD! YOU TALK AS THOUGH YOU WERE IN LOVE WITH HIM!

I AM, DAD. I'M IN LOVE WITH JIM BARRY!

JOB OF THE 80th CONGRESS

AT the very time when members of the Eightieth Congress convene in Washington, the living standards of the majority of the American people are being undermined by a continuing reduction in the purchasing power of their earnings.

The bulk of the national income is not going into the consuming channels of the workers but into the savings of the wealthy.

Congressional reports show that economic power is rapidly becoming concentrated in the hands of fewer people, with a corresponding concentration of power and influence which threatens the social and political health of our democracy.

The members of the Eightieth Congress have an opportunity to redirect our efforts and set America's course toward the goal of an abundant life for all the people. Theirs is the responsibility to fashion a program for the people's welfare which will enlist the enthusiastic support of all forward looking citizens.

DUE FOR SPOTLIGHT: With Congress due to reconvene, these are some of the Senators who will make news in coming weeks. Left to right: Kenneth Wherry (R. Nebr.), who helped kill OPA but is sore that other tories got too much credit for the murder; Robert Taft (R. O.,) probable chairman of the important Senate Labor Committee; and Claude Pepper (D. Fla.) one of the leaders of the Senate liberal block.

Many sections of organized labor, alarmed at the growing threat to our nation's economic health, are preparing to present their demands for wage increases to some of the largest and wealthiest corporations in America.

These unions have been chosen by the workers in their industries as the instrument through which to secure better wages and living conditions, and through these gains a better standard of living for all workers.

We of the CIO recognize that a policy of major wage increases is not sufficient to correct the economic and social ills which demand prompt attention. There is urgent need for a many-sided legislative program directed at some of the most pressing needs of the people. Such a program would be addressed to the following specific problems:

1 An equitable, democratic tax program, based on the ability of rich as well as poor to pay their fair share of our fiscal burden, is long overdue.

2 A genuine free enterprise system, freed from the growing menace of monopoly control or of the dominance of a few powerful corporations in each sector of our industrial life, would be welcomed by the American people, who cherish freedom of opportunity.

3 Provision of adequate housing—urban and rural—for all our citizens, but particularly veterans and low income groups, is a challenge which the 80th Congress must meet.

4 An agricultural program which will strengthen the economic position of working farmers, and prevent monopolistic practices in distributing such vital foods as meat and dairy products should be enacted.

5 A social welfare program—based on proposals for better educational opportunities, national health insurance, improved social security benefits for the aged and the infirm, higher minimum wage levels to protect the most lowly paid workers—must be given primary consideration by the 80th Congress.

6 The basic, traditional civil rights of the people must be bolstered immediately.

We cannot sit idly by and watch growing inter-racial violence, the cynical refusal to permit millions to vote, and the tendency to settle legitimate industrial disputes with injunctions and police violence.

7 American foreign affairs must be cast in the mold of the Good Neighbor Policy of our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

We must thwart the efforts of selfish men who would rob this country of its glorious tradition of providing democratic leadership and sympathetic assistance to the people and nations of the world.

These are the real problems to which the Congress should address its best efforts in the months ahead. If, on the other hand, Congress turns its back on the needs of the people, and attempts to harass and persecute the labor movement at the very moment when labor is attempting to make its own direct contribution to the national welfare by obtaining increased mass purchasing power through higher wages, the whole country will suffer.

America's future is in the hands of the members of the Eightieth Congress. We who are members of the CIO should urge Congress to work with the people to make it one of abundance, peace, and prosperity for all.

Anti-Labor Bills On Deck

COMES January 3 and a flood of anti-labor bills will begin to fill the Congressional hoppers.

These bills, covering almost every aspect of labor-management relations and the administration of unions, constitute the greatest single threat to American labor in several decades. Coupled with the Administration's unfortunate resort to the use of injunction in the United Mine Workers' dispute and the steady hum of the big-corporation propaganda mills, they provide a triple threat to the very existence of responsible trade unions.

This threat makes necessary an all-out campaign by American workers to protect their rights before it is too late. Unless the members of the Senate and the Congress hear the voice of the little people of America, and are impressed by its volume and unanimity, our unions will be harassed and ham-strung.

The effect will be to curb their power to bargain in the interests of their millions of members.

Many of these bills to hurt labor unions are already written and ready for action. Sen. Robert Taft (R. O.), head of the Republican steering committee and probable chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor & Education, gave notice before Christmas that he hopes to have an over-all anti-labor bill ready for consideration by the Senate.

MOST of the proposals described in the newspapers range from bad to worse. Few of them show any understanding whatever of the real problems of labor-management relations as they affect the factories and mills.

Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.) has discussed a variety of proposals, most of them closely resembling the Case Bill of last session. That bill was vetoed by Pres. Truman and the veto was subsequently upheld by a narrow margin. Many of the men who fought against the Case bill are no longer in the Congress.

Rep. Howard Smith (D. Va.), an old hand at labor-baiting, has proposed an even more sweeping attack on union rights.

The Smith bill would include most of the features or the Case Bill—outlawing unions of foremen, banning secondary boycotts and mass picketing—and go on to cripple the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Already weakened by cuts in its working funds, the NLRB would be split in two by the Smith proposals. Under the guise of giving employers "freedom of speech" Smith would pave the way for all sorts of anti-union propaganda and coercion by employers and would kill those sections of the Wagner Act which support the union shop.

Rep. Christian Herter (R. Mass.) has written a bill to outlaw all strikes in public utilities. The Bay State Congressman has failed to indicate, however, any method for utilities workers to win a decent wage from their employers without the use of the strike threat weapon.

IN the Senate these and other labor proposals will be screened by a Republican subcommittee consisting of Taft, Ball and Alexander Smith (N. J.). Taft has given the impression that this trio of conservatives will seek to determine basic GOP strategy on the various labor bills.

Intimation of an effort to slip the Case bill, or its 1947 equivalent, through the Congress quickly came from Sen. Taft. His statement pointed up the need for quick action by workers throughout the country to rally in defense of their rights.

Said Taft:

"It will not be necessary to hold many hearings on Case bill provisions. Many hearings have already been held, and there are volumes of testimony and discussion relating to its provisions.

"As to the closed shop, there is simply the decision as to whether the ban should or should not go into the bill."

On the other hand, liberal Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.) who steps down as chairman of the Labor Committee made clear that Congressional progressives don't go along on these plans to cripple unions.

Deriding the plea to "equalize" the Wagner Act in order to give employers similar status to unions in labor's magna charta, Sen. Murray asserted:

"I do not agree with the argument that labor has an over-balancing power. Management has always been able to take care of itself and it never was stronger than now."

YOUR JOB

A CALL for increased legislative activity "back home" was sounded this week by CIO legislative representatives on the eve of the convening of the Eightieth Congress.

Despite the progressive setback in the November 5 elections it was pointed out, both conservative and liberal Congressmen and Senators are responsive to the will of voters back in their districts.

With many Republicans jockeying for power and position, the Republican forces on Capitol Hill by no means represent a cohesive bloc, and strong indications of sentiment against anti-labor legislation and for progressive social welfare bills will be noticed in Washington.

Write and wire your Congressmen about the bills which concern you; keep an eye on what Congress does and let your representatives know what you think about them; and demand that they do not set the clock back to the days of Hooverism.
